ON THE TEXT OF BEOWULF

THE editors of Beowulf have, with rare exceptions, concentrated their attention upon the problem of fixing and interpreting the text, and have avoided discussing the literary history of the poem. Theories as to the origin and structure of Beowulf have been developed, not in editions, but in monographs such as those of ten Brink, Müllenhoff, and Boer.

This practice is probably sound: and in accordance with it I have made no pretence here to deal with questions of the "higher criticism." I hope to attempt this in an Introduction to the Study of Beowulf, which is to be issued separately. But an editor ought to give an account of the principles upon which he has worked, and the relation of his text to the MS. This duty is particularly incumbent upon him, when he is revising a standard text.

THE MANUSCRIPT

The Beowulf has been preserved in one manuscript only, written about the year 1000: a feature which it shares with most extant Old English poetry. As to the history of this manuscript we have no information, till we find it in the collection formed by Sir Robert Cotton, which is now in the British Museum. From its position in the book-cases of this collection the MS containing Beowulf received the name and number (Cotton Vitellius A. 15) by which it is still known. Our first record of it dates from 1705, when Wanley in his Catalogue of Anglo-Saxon Manuscripts described our poem as telling of the wars which a Dane, Beowulf, waged against the Kings of Sweden.

Twenty-six years later occurred the disastrous fire in which so many of the Cottonian MSS. were either destroyed or, like the Beowulf MS., damaged.

It was not till the eighteenth century was drawing to a close that any serious attempt was made to master the poem. Thorkelin, an Icelander hy birth, inspired by that revival of historical studies which marked the close of the eighteenth century in Denmark, and doubtless led by Wanley's misdescription of the MS., came to England, made a transcript of the MS., and caused a second transcript to be made. After twenty years of labour his edition was nearing completion, when in 1807 "the Englishman came, the damned thief'," bombarded Copenhagen, and incidentally destroyed Thorkelin's translation and notes. The much more valuable transcripts of the MS. fortunately escaped. But the work had all to be done again, and it was not till 1815 that the first edition of the Beowulf appeared, under the title of De Danorum rebus gestis...poema Danicum, dialecto Anglo-saxonica.

Thorkelin's ignorance has been harshly censured by later students, who have often forgotten that, by his two transcripts, made more than forty years before any Englishman cared to study the poem, the Scandinavian scholar had done a service, the value of which cannot be exaggerated. For after Thorkelin's time the MS. continued to deteriorate steadily, by the dropping away of its charred edges. Thorkelin's mistranslations simply do not matter to us. What does matter is that he recorded what was to be read in the MS. at the time he saw it. He, and, to a greater extent, the transcriber whom he employed, made many mistakes: but the two transcripts correct each other: and the mistakes are of a type easily detected and explained. Indeed Thorkelin's ignorance of Anglo-Saxon, and the ignorance of his scribe, add immensely to the value of their transcripts. Had they known more, they would have been tempted to fill in from conjecture such gaps as they did find, and this would have deprived their testimony of its value.

Thorkelin's transcripts are generally referred to as A (the copy made by Thorkelin's order) and B (the copy which he made personally). Both belong to the year 1787: they are preserved in the Royal Library at Copenhagen.

In 1830 the MS. was again copied by Thorpe, who hewever did not publish till a quarter of a century later. In 1833 (and more correctly in a second edition, in 1835) Kemble published the results of his inspection. In 1861 N. F. S. Grundtvig published a text based upon an examination both of the MS. and of Thorkelin's transcripts. In 1876 Kölbing published collations in Herrigs Archiv (LVI.), and both Wülker (1881) and Holder (1881: from his notes made in 1876) prefixed to their texts a transcription of the MS., letter by letter.

Finally, in 1882, a facsimile of the MS. was published by the Early English Text Society, with a transcription by Prof. Zupitza (quoted in the notes below as "Zupitza"). This transcription embodies more than Zupitza's personal reading of the MS.; for he endeavoured "to give the text as far as possible in that condition in which it stood in the MS. a century ago." He weighed the evidence of all the scholars, enumerated above, who had examined the MS. before him, and he had the advantage of comparing the MS. itself with Thorkelin's two transcripts, which were sent to the British Museum for the purpose.

The MS. having thus been collated and recollated by eight scholars, each in his day peculiarly competent, it might well seem that nothing further remained to be done. And in fact most recent students have been content to take the facsimile, and Zupitza's transliteration, as final. But in the study of a MS. which has suffered as the Beowulf MS. has, finality is indeed hardly to be reached; and Dr Sedgefield has shown in his recent edition what good results may yet be produced by an editor who will look at the MS. for himself. Cotton Vitellius A. 15 is still a field in which a student, particularly if armed with much patience and a strong lens, may have, "on the whole, not a bad day's sport."

The facsimile is indeed an excellent one: but when it is remembered that the MS. has often to be turned many ways, and examined under many lights, before the stroke of a letter can be distinguished from some accidental crease, it is clear that no facsimile can be an adequate substitute for examination of the MS. itself. One example of this will suffice. An American scholar observed from the facsimile that the word heado in an admittedly defective passage (ll. 62-3) was apparently written over an erasure. Since the necessity for an erasure pointed to some kind of confusion in the mind of the scribe, he concluded that consequently it was here, and not, as generally supposed, at an earlier point, that the corruption had crept into the text, and that therefore the generally accepted emendations must be given up, and an attempt made to solve the crux by starting from the point where the "erasure" occurs.

Having made up his mind from the autotype that there was an erasure, he subsequently examined the MS. at the British Museum, and whilst thinking that the erasure was not as manifest in the MS. as in some copies of the autotype. he adhered to his position. The appearance of an erasure is indeed so strong in the facsimile that no one has disputed it: and I was therefore greatly surprised, when consulting the MS. itself, to find that it showed no trace of that roughening of the surface which was to be expected. On the parchment being held up to the light, all the dim marks. which in the facsimile (and at first sight in the MS. also) look like fragments of an erased word, turned out to be nothing more than strokes of the word on the other side of the leaf, which (as so often in the Beowulf MS.) shine through the parchment. Yet over the reading of these "erased letters" there has been considerable, and heated, controversy: and the discussion of the "erased word" and of the theories built upon it has been the subject of seven contributions to a philological periodical, consisting altogether of about ten thousand printed words. It is painful to think that the time of skilled compositors should have been thus wasted.

A facsimile is given of two pages of the MS., and of the pages in Thorkelin's transcripts A and B corresponding to the second of these.

The facsimiles of the MS should be compared with the corresponding passage in the text. Such a comparison will show the student what are the main difficulties which beset the editor, and how he is helped by Thorkelin's transcripts. Several things will at once be obvious:

- (1) The lines of the MS. do not correspond to the verse lines of the poem. This does not, however, cause any serious trouble, for so uniform is Old English metre that cases where there can be any real doubt as to the division of the lines very seldom occur. Holthausen would put geaf at the end of l. 2430: Schücking at the beginning of l. 2431.
- (2) The punctuation of the MS. is meagre and unreliable. The full stop is, indeed, sometimes used as we should use it: e.g. after the word cyning in l. 11 of p. 1; but it is often placed in the middle of a sentence, as after aldorlease, three lines below.
- (3) Though the first word after a full stop is not infrequently written with a capital, proper names are not written with capital letters. Hence, for instance, the dispute whether hondsciō (l. 2076) is, or is not, a personal name.
- (4) Vowel length is only rarely marked. Hence difficulties like that of determining whether gest stands for gest 'stranger' or gest, 'spirit'.'
- (5) One word is sometimes written as two or even three words, and two words are often written as one. Hyphens are unknown to the scribes. Hence eofor lic scionon (1. 303) has been read both as eofor-lic scionon and eofor lic-scionon. And in addition to the difficulty of interpreting such gaps as the scribe did undoubtedly leave, we have the further difficulty of deciding when he did, and when he did not, intend the vague and indeterminate space which he left between letters to be regarded as a gap separating two words.

- (6) Though there are no glaring examples on the pages reproduced, it appears that the scribes worked mechanically, sometimes altering the entire meaning of a sentence by omitting little words, like no, 'not.' The painfully slow care with which the Old English letters were traced would tend to make the scribe lose the general drift of what he was writing.
- (7) The spelling is inconsistent: moncynn appears as mancynne (dat.) in l. 110, as moncynnes (gen.) in l. 196, and as mon cynnes (gen.) in l. 1955. Yet, compared with that of many a Middle English MS. or Tudor printed book, the spelling might almost be called uniform.
- (8) It will be seen that both pages of the MS., but more particularly the second, are badly damaged at the edges and corners. With the facsimile of the second page should be compared the facsimile of the corresponding passage from Thorkelin's transcripts. When these transcripts were made the damage cannot have extended beyond the margins, and the written page must have been, like the transcript, complete 1. At the present day, out of 108 words, 26 are either quite gone or damaged. This will give some measure of the value of Thorkelin's transcripts. Of course even without them we should still be able to get much information from the texts of Kemble and Thorpe as to what the MS. was like in its less damaged state: but, as it is, we depend mainly upon Thorkelin. As explained above, the mechanical nature of these transcripts is their greatest merit. It is quite clear that the transcriber of A had no knowledge whatsoever of Old English. This is proved by spellings like relite for rehte, riga for wiga, crioan for cwioan. How slight Thorkelin's own knowledge must have been at the time he made his transcript is shown by similar misspellings, e.g. glogude for geogude.

The handwriting of the second page reproduced from the Beowulf MS. differs from that of the first. The second hand begins with moste in l. 1939. Judith, which follows Beowulf in the composite MS. Cotton Vitellius A. 15, is asserted on good authority to be also in this second hand. This is important, for with the second hand many variations in spelling are introduced into Beowulf. Our first instinct would be to attribute these altered spellings to the new copyist: but since they do not occur in the Judith, this can hardly be the correct explanation, if he also transcribed that poem. In that case it would seem rather that the second scribe copied his original more exactly, and therefore retained features which the first scribe was prone to obliterate. The peculiarities of spelling which meet us in the later portion of Beowulf seem, then, to be derived from the MS. from which our existing copy was transcribed.

The abbreviations used by the scribes are neither numerous nor difficult. Instead of ond, which occurs only three times (ll. 600, 1148, 2040), the symbol 7 is almost invariably used. For p is similarly found. It has been disputed whether \bar{p} can also stand for p \bar{a} (see note to l. 15): if it cannot there are certainly instances in Beowulf where \bar{p} and p \bar{a} have been confused by a natural scribal blunder. Sense is much improved by reading \bar{p} as p \bar{a} in ll. 15, 1833, 3134 (cf. 2701) and p \bar{a} as \bar{p} in l. 2629.

To signify m, especially final m, the scribe drew a heavy hooked line over the preceding vowel.

From the times of the earliest O.E. glosses this symbol is also used occasionally to signify n. The Beowulf scribe, like the scribe of the almost contemporary Exeter Book, does not normally use the mark for n^2 . But the older MS. which he was copying perhaps did so, and this would account for such a blunder as $hr\bar{u}sam$ for $hr\bar{u}san$ (2279) and for the frequent omission of an n in our manuscript.

² In ll. 2645, 2741, read for δ am rather than for δ am. In bo \bar{n} (=bonne) the mark is used for ne, and for en on the abnormally contracted last page of the MS.

TEXTUAL EMENDATION

It is most important that the student should study the two facsimile pages of the Beowulf MS. sufficiently to familiarize himself with the forms of the Anglo-Saxon script, for it is only by this means that he will be able to weigh the value of the different conjectural emendations. A conjecture which seems a very violent one when expressed in modern type may yet appear very reasonable when we picture the form of the Old English letters. From this point of view it is a pity that we have abandoned the custom, so generally followed at the beginning of Old English studies, of printing Old English texts in type which was a conventionalized facsimile of the Old English hand. The letters are picturesque, and can be learnt in five minutes.

Much work was done in the emendation and elucidation of the text by Grundtvig, Kemble, Thorpe and Ettmuller. The constant occurrence of the name of Grundtvig in the textual notes bears witness to the frequency with which he cleared up some desperate place in the MS. But these emendations only represent a portion of Grundtvig's achievement. Working from Thorkelin's inaccurate text, he made many conjectures which, on a more careful examination, were found to be actually the readings of the MS. Such success naturally aroused confidence in his conjectural restorations.

The great bulk of Grundtvig's emendations were appended to the translation which he published in 1820. Other emendations were made in his edition, published in 1861. These two books have not been sufficiently distinguished by editors of Beowulf. Yet in discussing the priority of an emendation it is obviously important to know in which of two books, separated by more than forty years, a scholar may have made his conjectures. In this edition, therefore, the word 'Grundtvig,' followed by the number of a page, refers invariably to the translation of 1820; references to the edition of 1861 are specified as such.

Grundtvig had contributed a large number of these emendations to a Copenhagen paper during the year 1815¹. The perfect editor would no doubt go through these articles, and note exactly where each emendation first appeared. But life is short and there is much to do: I have therefore only referred to these periodical articles of Grundtvig where it appeared that there was some useful purpose to be gained by so doing. Generally speaking I have taken Grundtvig's publication of 1820 as summing up the results of his early work, and have not striven to go behind it.

The student must not be surprised if he finds the same emendation attributed by different scholars sometimes to Kemble and sometimes to Thorpe, since frequently Kemble's emendations were only suggested in the notes of his second volume, but were first given in the text by Thorpe; and there was so much intercommunication between the two scholars that it is not easy to say to whom belongs the credit of some particular emendations.

Much confusion has also resulted from the differences between the first edition of Kemble's Beowulf (1833: limited to 100 copies) and the second revised edition of 1835. For instance, Zupitza—than whom no one knew more of the history of Beowulf criticism, and whose premature death was a loss to Beowulf scholarship from which we are still suffering—charged other editors with inaccuracy in their quotations of Kemble's: the explanation is that they were using the one edition, and he was using the other, and that the two editions differ very widely. I have therefore thought it better to differentiate. 'Kemble ω' refers to the edition of 1833; 'Kemble ω' to that of 1835; 'Kemble ω' to the list of emendations which Kemble appended to his translation in 1837. 'Thorpe' refers, of course, to Thorpe's edition of 1855.

The labours of Ettmüller covered a period little shorter than those of Grundtvig. In my notes, 'Ettmüller $_{\omega}$ ' refers to the translation of 1840: 'Ettmüller $_{\omega}$ ' to the abbreviated Beowulf which appeared in the book of extracts entitled

Engla and Seama Scopas and Bôceras, 1850: 'Ettmüller w' to the edition (still abbreviated) of 1875.

A new era begins with the publication of Grein's complete corpus of Anglo-Saxon poetry, between 1857 and 1864 (4 vols.). Grein's actual text of Beowulf, both in the first volume of this Bibliothek, and in his subsequent separate edition, is not without its faults: but the great lexicon given in the last two volumes of the Bibliothek brought to bear upon the interpretation of Beowulf the whole store of knowledge of Old English poetic speech. The student who has made some progress, and hopes to make more, will still find his best course to be the looking up in Grein's Sprachschats of parallels for the usage of any words puzzling him. In quoting I differentiate 'Grein (1857); 'Grein (2)' (1867); 'Grein (3)' (Grein's hand-copy, corrected, as used by Wülker).

Since Grein's day the edition of Hevne (1863, etc.), constantly revised, has continued to hold its own (English translation, Harrison and Sharp, 1882, etc.), rivalled for two decades by that of Holder (1881, etc.: last edit., 1899). Kluge added valuable conjectures to Holder's edition: to these 'Kluge' if quoted in my notes, without details, refers'. Wülker's revision of Grein's Bibliothek (1883, etc.) by giving scrupulously accurate texts, with full collations, remedied the one fault of Grein's great work. In recent years four editions have been published: (1) Trautmann's (1904), distinguished by bold alterations of the text; (2) Holthausen's (third edit. 1912-13), invaluable for its closely packed references and bibliographies: Holthausen's treatment of the text represents a middle course between the violent alterations of Trautmann and the conservative text of (3) Schücking, whose revision of Heyne (nominally the eighth edit., 1908: tenth, 1913: but amounting in fact almost to a new work) has restored its place of honour to that classic text; whilst (4) Dr Sedgefield's text (second edit., 1913) has gone far to remove from English scholarship the reproach of neglect of the earliest monuments of our literature.

AIM OF THE PRESENT EDITION

Text. In revising the text I have made it my aim to retain that conservatism which characterised Mr Wyatt's edition. In fifty places I have, however, felt compelled, mainly on metrical grounds, to desert the MS., where Mr Wyatt adhered to it. But this is balanced by the fact that in fifty-one places I undertake the defence of the MS., even where Mr Wyatt had abandoned it.

When Mr Wyatt's edition was first issued in 1894 it was necessary for him to protest against wanton alterations of the MS. such as fāmigheals for fāmiheals. Such alterations are now no longer tolerated: and even to argue against them would be an anachronism: Mr Wyatt has the greatest reward that can befall a controversialist, that of finding his protest so generally accepted as to be out of date.

But with the increased knowledge of Old English metre which we owe to the genius of Sievers, a new reason for deserting the MS. has been approved, to some extent at least, by most recent editors. In places where the metre shows that the original poet must have used a form different from that in our extant MS., it is now usual to put that form back: to write e.g. frēga for frēa, gāan for gān, dōið for dōð.

To the present editor there seems to be no middle course between, on the one hand, leaving the language of the poem in the form given to it by its last transcribers, and, on the other hand, attempting to rewrite the whole poem in the language of the eighth century. The rule "to emend the text where the metre shows the form given in the MS. to be wrong" sounds simple, but is, in practice, not possible. For the suspected form may occur in a line which is absolutely unmetrical, in one which is merely hard to parallel, or in one which is of a type usually avoided, but undoubtedly to be found. Are we to alter in all three cases, or only in the first? And having altered a form in a place where it is unmetrical, what are we to do when we meet the identical form in a place where it is possible?

Unless we make changes right through, we merely produce a text which is an inconsistent mixture of eighth and tenth century forms.

But, it may be said, the MS. itself is not consistent, for the last transcribers here and there retained earlier forms. They did, and these forms may be of the greatest value in enabling us to trace the history of the poem. For that very reason the issues should not be confused by inserting into the text a number of ancient forms which are not in the MS. If we scatter these over the page, the student is led to believe that he has come across forms like frēga, gāan, dōið in his reading of Beowulf. All the typographical devices of italics and brackets cannot prevent this: in a poem of over three thousand lines no student can be expected to remember for very long exactly what letters are printed in italic, and exactly what in roman type.

Besides, though we may be certain, on metrical grounds, that the word $g\bar{a}n$ in $h\bar{a}t$ in $g\bar{a}n$ (l. 386) represents an earlier word of two syllables, we cannot be certain whether that word was $g\bar{a}an$ or gangan.

The difficulty that monosyllables in the text have to do duty as disyllables can be met quite simply. Where the metre shows that a long vowel or diphthong, such as $g\bar{a}n$, $fr\bar{e}a$ was originally disyllabic, I write it with the circumflex: $g\hat{a}n$, $fr\hat{e}a$; in other cases the makron is used: $h\bar{u}$, $\delta\bar{c}a$. This method suffices to draw the student's attention to the metrical fact: at the same time he is not misled by seeing in the text a form for which there is no MS. authority, and which the original author may, after all, not have used.

To attempt to reinsert these earlier forms is indeed to carry into text editing the mistake of the architects of half a century ago, who, finding a fourteenth century church which showed traces of having been remodelled out of a twelfth century one, proceeded to knock out the Decorated tracery in order to insert their conjectural restoration of the original Norman lights. By so doing they merely falsified the history of the building, and left us with windows which are neither 'Decorated' nor 'Norman' but architectural lies.

Experience has now taught our church restorers that, however much we may regret the work of the fourteenth century remodeller, we cannot escape from it. And the same is true of the text-restoration of Beowulf. To put back into the text a few sporadic ancient forms is merely to increase confusion. To put back the whole poem into the language of about the year 700 is impossible. How impossible can best be shown by means of a comparison. In the case of Piers Plowman (A text) we have fifteen MSS. some belonging to a period but little later than the author's lifetime. Most of these MSS are excellent ones, and by a comparison of them it is possible to reconstruct a text immensely better than even the best of these MSS. Yet. whilst the wording of this text can be fixed with considerable certainty, it is impossible to reconstruct the exact dialectical colouring in a form which would command any measure of general consent. How can we hope to do so, then, in the case of a text extant in one MS. transcribed nearly three centuries after the poem was first composed?

It does not follow that we need print the text exactly as it stands, relegating all attempts at emendation to the notes. It seems possible to distinguish between those changes in spelling and grammatical form which the scribes deliberately made with fair consistency, and those rarer cases where they have, generally owing to carelessness or misunderstanding, altered the wording of a passage. If the critic thinks he can emend such passages, he has every right to do so. To correct blunders which the scribes made inadvertently, and which they themselves corrected when they noticed them, is quite a different thing from putting back the language which the scribes deliberately adopted into that which they deliberately rejected.

The degree of faithfulness at which the scribe aimed of course varied greatly with individual cases. It may be admitted that some ancient scribes had almost as little respect for the MS. before them as some modern editors. But an accurate scribe did not as a rule depart from the wording of his original except as a result of oversight. On the other hand, even an accurate scribe did not hesitate to alter the spelling and form of words.

Accordingly, whilst it is often possible from MS. evidence to aim at reconstructing the exact words of a text, it is an immeasurably more difficult task, unless we have some external help, to aim at reconstructing the original dialect.

The rule which I have followed is therefore this. Where there is reason to think that the spelling or the dialectal form has been tampered with, I do not try to restore the original, such a task being at once too uncertain and too far-reaching. But where there is reason to think that the scribe has departed from the wording and grammatical construction of his original, and that this can be restored with tolerable certainty. I do so.

And here again the study of metre is of the greatest help. There can be no possible doubt that a half-line like secg betsta (l. 947) is unmetrical: that the half-line originally ran secga betsta. No device of circumflex accents can help us here, and it appears to me that the editor has no choice but to write the words as they originally stood. Yet caution is advisable: where there is even a sporting chance of the MS. reading being correct I retain it: in some instances I retain the MS. reading, though firmly believing that it is wrong; because none of the emendations suggested is satisfactory.

"I have indulged but sparingly," Mr Wyatt wrote, "in the luxury of personal emendations, because they are obviously the greatest disqualification for discharging duly the functions of an editor." This view was strongly disputed at the time, notably by Zupitza, who urged, quite truly, that it is the duty of an editor to bring all his powers to bear upon the construction of a correct text; that, for instance, one of the greatest merits of Lachmann as an editor lay precisely in his personal emendations. Yet here discrimination is desirable. We do not all possess the genius of Lachmann, and if we did, we have not the advantage he had in being early in the field. On the contrary, we find the study of Beowulf littered with hundreds of conjectural emendations. All these the unfortunate editor must judge. admitting some few to a place in his text, according more a cursory reference in his notes, but of necessity dismissing the majority without mention. It will be easier for the magistrate, if he has to sit in judgment upon none of his own offspring. True, there are editors, inflexible as Lucius Junius Brutus, who have filled many pages of periodicals with conjectural emendations, but who yet, when they accept the responsibility of editorship, admit that few or none of their own conjectures are worthy of serious consideration. But such integrity is rare; and where an editor has to judge between the emendations of so many capable scholars, he may do well for his own part to adopt a self-denying ordinance. Especially is this desirable when he is editing a text on strictly conservative lines: it would be impertinent for me, whilst excluding from the text a number of the really brilliant conjectures of recent students, to allow a place to my own very inferior efforts. I have therefore followed, and indeed bettered, Mr Wyatt's example: he made few personal emendations: I have made none.

For, indeed, conjectural emendation has been allowed to run riot. Advocates of a conservative text are often taunted with credulous belief in the letter of the manuscript-"Buchstaben-glauben." But, in fact, the charge of superstitious credulity might more justly be brought against those who believe that, with the miserably inadequate means at our disposal, we can exactly restore the original text. Prof. Trautmann assures us that the extant manuscript is grossly faulty, and on the strength of this belief puts forth an edition full of the most drastic and daring alterations. But, if we grant (for the sake of argument) that the manuscript is as grossly erroneous as Prof. Trautmann's emendations postulate, then it follows that it is too bad to afford a sound basis for conjectural emendation at all. If Prof. Trautmann's premises were correct, the only course open to the editor would be to remove merely those obvious and surface blemishes of the manuscript as to which there can be little or no doubt, and then to say: "This is the best that can be done with a text so peculiarly corrupt. I therefore leave it at that, and if I must work at text-criticism, I will choose some other text, where there is better material at my disposal, and where I can consequently proceed by critical methods rather than by guess-work."

And, without going as far as this, we may reasonably regret that much of the scholarship and acumen squandered on the conjectural emendation of Beowulf has not been devoted to certain Middle English texts. There the evidence is often abundant, and of a kind which, if properly investigated and utilized, would enable us to make indisputable corrections of important texts in hundreds of places.

Type. The chief innovation, and one which will, I expect, be generally disapproved, is the introduction into the text of the Old Eng. symbol z. Against this z most teachers seem to cherish an unreasoning antipathy. Now, in itself, it surely matters little whether we reproduce an Old Eng. consonant by the Mod. Eng. form, or by a facsimile of the Old Eng. form. By general consent b and s are used: yet it would not matter if we were to write th instead. But it does matter if the symbol misleads the student. Now, whilst most consonants have much the same value in Old as in Mod. Eng., Mod. Eng. g fulfils one only of the three functions of Old Eng. z. To the elementary student it is really helpful to have a constant reminder of this fact. He should not be misled by the spellings hiz or wizze, as he is only too likely to be by the spellings hig or wigge.

Besides, as has been pointed out by Sievers, with the end of the Anglo-Saxon period both z and g came into use: z to signify the spirant, g the stop. To write g in Anglo-Saxon texts conveys the idea that the symbol z was added in Middle English to signify the spirant; when in reality it was the z which was used all along and the g which was added later to denote the stopped sound.

In the text I have therefore followed the Old English usage, and have written the 3 wherever it occurs in the MS.

But where the scribe actually used G, as a capital, I have retained it. In the Introduction, Notes and Glossary I write g, as a matter of convenience.

Hyphens and Punctuation. As to the use of hyphens and the general principles of punctuation there is no change from the practice advocated by Mr Wyatt in the first edition:

It will have been seen that the MS, gives no help in one of the most difficult problems that beset the editor of O. E. poems, the question of the use of hyphens. Grein and Sweet discard them altogether. I cannot but question whether this is not to shirk one's duty. At least it is a method that I have not been able at present to bring myself to adopt, tempting as it is. The difficulty of course is as to "where to draw the line"-where to use a hyphen or to write as one word, where to use a hyphen or write as two words. The former is the chief difficulty, and here as elsewhere I have endeavoured to find the path "of least resistance." Prepositional prefixes in my text are not marked off by a hyphen from the following word: on the other hand, adverbial prefixes, such as up in up-lang, ut in ut-weard, are so marked off. This then is where I have, not without misgivings. "drawn the line." Where the two parts of a compound seem to preserve their full notional force I have used a hyphen; where the force of one part seems to be quite subordinate to that of the other. I have written them as one word. It is the familiar distinction of compounds and derivatives over again, but at a stage of the language when some compounds were in course of becoming derivatives. Doubtless there are mistakes and inconsistencies. I need hardly say I shall be glad to have them pointed out.

The punctuation of Beowulf has hitherto been largely traditional. as it were, and largely German, and German punctuation of course differs in some respects from English. Some editors have shown daring originality in the substitution of colons for the semi-colons, and marks of exclamation for the full-stops, of previous editors. Periods have usually been held too sacred to question. I may say at once that, although I have been extremely conservative in my handling of the text. I have felt and have shown scant courtesy for much of the traditional punctuation. Let me state here the principles, right or wrong, upon which I have acted. First, I have made the punctuation as simple as possible. I have therefore done away with the somewhat fine distinction between the colon and the semicolon, and have restricted the use of the former to marking the opening of an oratio recta, and to a very few similar loci, such as Il. 801, 1392, 1476. In the same way, I have, wherever possible, done away with parentheses, and with our modern meretricious marks of exclamation. If the reader's sense or emotions do not tell him where he ought to feel exclamatory, he must suffer the consequences. Secondly, I have attempted to make the punctuation logical, especially by the use of pairs of commas wherever the sequence of a sentence is interrupted by parallelisms. This may be made clearer by a reference to ll. 1235–7, 1283–4, 3051–2. But, on the other hand, I have as far as possible avoided breaking up the metrical unit of the half line with a comma.

Notes. The chief difference between this edition and its predecessor will be found in the greater diffuseness of the notes, which have been almost entirely rewritten. "The infelicity of our times" has compelled me, as revising editor, to depart from Mr Wyatt's practice of quoting but sparsely the emendations which he did not accept. In the last eighteen years the number of emendations and interpretations has multiplied enormously, and many of these it is impossible to neglect.

To discuss at length the pros and cons of these disputed points is impossible in a text-book: such task must be left to the lecturer: but if no information on the subject is given in the text-book, the task both of lecturer and student is made unnecessarily heavy. Authorities are therefore quoted rather freely: and in the manner of quoting them a difficulty arose. To quote arguments at anylength would have been to swell this book unduly; but to quote the name of the scholar who has originated any conjecture without further particulars, is to encourage the student in the pestilent superstition that he is expected to know which scholar holds which particular view: whereas in reality all that concerns him is the ground upon which a particular view is held.

The student who reads the seventeen pages in which Sievers defends the reading egsode eorlas (l. 6) will have had a lesson which should be of permanent value to him: a lesson in Old English metre, in Old English syntax, in critical methods, and above all in the truth that a man should do with his might that which his hand findeth to do, even though it be nothing better than the emending of a doubtful line. The student who understands, if only in broadest outline, the grounds upon which Kock defends the MS. reading eorl, and Sievers declares eorl impossible, has acquired a piece of grammatical and metrical knowledge which should be of constant use to him, as he works through his Beowulf. The student who, hoping to get marks in an examination, commits to memory the fact that Kock supports eorl, Sievers eorlas, has done nothing save degrade his intelligence to the level of that of a dog, learning tricks for a lump of sugar.

For this reason, in quoting the names of the proposers or defenders of emendations or interpretations, I have indicated (as briefly as possible) the place where further particulars can be found. Not that I wish to add to the already heavy yoke of the student by expecting him to look up all, or indeed any great proportion, of such references. Even if he looks up none, a constant reminder that these are references, not formulae to be learnt by heart, is worth giving. For even the most exacting teacher will hardly demand that the student should commit to memory the year, periodical and page in which each emendation appeared. All such references are placed between square brackets, and elementary students should skip these portions of the notes.

To the advanced student it is hoped that the references may be useful: and in small classes where the lecturer uses the "Seminar" method, and expects each member of the class in turn to study specially some section or aspect of the poem, they may be worked profitably. If a student is led by these references to turn only to Klaeber's articles in Modern Philology, or Sievers' monographs in the Beiträge, they will not have been given in vain.

In references to editions and translations, where the comment will be found under the appropriate line, no further details are given. The modern editions quoted in the notes are

Glossary. Here I have tried to depart as little as possible from the plan laid down by Mr Wyatt. The glossary makes no attempt at being a complete verbal and grammatical index to the poem. It is desirable that such an index should exist: that there should be a place where a scholar who wishes to know exactly in what places even the commonest word is used in Beowulf, should be able to find the information he seeks. Such an index is supplied in Holder's edition, where all the instances in which even ond occurs will be found recorded: it is also supplied, on a slightly different plan, in the editions of Holthausen, Heyne-Schücking, and Sedgefield. Finally Mr A. S. Cook has produced a Concordance to Beowulf (Halle, 1911). The work having been done so often and so well, it would have been useless to attempt to convert the glossary to this edition into yet another complete index to the poem; and the space saved can be utilized in explaining matters more necessary perhaps to the elementary student. Indeed, as Mr Wyatt remarked, a too elaborate glossary may "rob the work of much of its educative value": it is better to "furnish the requisite amount of help and no more."

One of the chief difficulties which beset English students of Anglo-Saxon is that of preventing their knowledge of modern English from leading them astray. When we meet with the word æfter, we must remember that 'after' only gives one specialized meaning of the O.E. word: fær would seldom be correctly translated by 'fear.' Another difficulty is the wide range of meanings possessed by the O.E. poetic vocabulary, and the ease with which a highly abstract passes into a very concrete idea. Thus dugub signifies doughtiness, excellence: again, it signifies that body of tried veterans from whom the quality of dugub is particularly to be expected. But we can hardly translate dugub simply as 'warriors': for the abstract meaning reacts upon the concrete: they must be doughty warriors. A very close parallel is supplied by the English word 'chivalry,' though here the original sense is concrete. Starting with the signification of a body of horsemen, the word comes to signify the quality which should distinguish a knight. Then the abstract meaning reflects upon the concrete. When Milton speaks of 'paynim chivalry,' or Byron of the 'chivalry' gathered in Brussels before the field of Waterloo, the word means more than merely 'warriors.' So with dugub. elsewhere suggested translating it by 'chivalry,' to which, in both its meanings, it closely approximates: cūbe hē duquee beaw "he knew the rule of chivalry1."

Duguh is much more than 'grown up men.' Thralls and churls half trained

To avoid dogmatism, and steadily to compare one passage with another, is the only way of safety. It is by the comparative method that Klaeber has been able to throw so much light upon many dark places in the text. Many alterations have been made in the glossary in view of the arguments produced by Klaeber: but in the main the glossary remains Mr Wyatt's work, though of course I take full responsibility for it in its present form.

The MS. has been carefully examined for the purposes of this edition. Whenever Zupitza's opinion as to the reading of the MS. is quoted, it may be taken, unless the contrary is indicated, that I read the MS. in the same way, though Zupitza is quoted for authority. With regard to Thorkelin's transcripts, however, although I have examined these at Copenhagen, I have trusted mainly to Zupitza, since they are too clear to leave much room for dispute.

I have to thank many scholars for their generous cooperation.

The proofs of the Introduction, Text and Notes have been read by my former teacher Prof. W. P. Ker, and by my colleague, Mr J. H. G. Grattan. To both of them, for performing this friendly office amid great pressure of work, my most grateful thanks are due. I am indebted to them for a large number of corrections and suggestions.

Mr Wyatt most kindly placed in my hands all the material he had collected for a new edition, including a copy of Heyne's edition of 1879, with copious MS. notes by Dr T. Miller, the editor of the O.E. Bede. These MS. notes would well repay a careful investigation, and to publish gleanings from them would be an act of piety to the memory of a good scholar. I regret that through lack of time I have not been able to make as much use of them for this edition as I had hoped. Mr Wyatt has further read the proofs throughout, with scrupulous care, and I am deeply indebted to him in many ways.

in war may be grown up, and may on occasion even be warriors, but they are not dugub.

If the text should be found to be typographically accurate, thanks are largely due to two old pupils of mine, Miss E. V. Hitchcock and Mr E. Emson, and also to the Cambridge Press reader. Prof. Sedgefield kindly placed at my disposal a set of the proofs of his second edition, which has enabled me to bring up to date my references to his most valuable work.

Like every student of Beowulf, I have been particularly indebted to the bibliographical notes of Holthausen, the Heyne-Schücking glossary, the metrical researches of Sievers, and the syntactical studies of Klaeber. The footnotes give the names of the originators of emendations adopted in the text: and I have tried to give fairly exhaustive information of all readings adopted in any recent standard edition: for a student ought so to study Beowulf as to be able to translate not one particular text, but any.

Lastly, I regret that I have not been in a position to take the excellent advice recently given by one editor of Beowulf to another: that he should let his edition mature for the nine years recommended by Horace. Had I been permitted to spend so long in revising my proofs, the result would, I hope, have been a better edition: the printer's bill for corrections would certainly have been enormous. But it is well to stop weighing pros and cons, as Mosca de' Lamberti said, since "a thing done hath an end."

For giving which evil counsel, Dante saw the mutilated form of Mosca in the ninth pit of the eighth circle of Hell. If I have closured any discussion by a too hasty application of the principle 'cosa fatta capo ha' I hope my punishment may be more lenient. And so, in the pious words of an editor of four centuries ago, "If any faute be, I remyt the correctyon thereof to them that discretly shall fynde any reasonable defaute; and in their so doynge I shall pray god to sende them the blysse of heven."

With even more certainty the following supposed cases of marking may be dismissed:

we, 270; ancre, 303; hat, 897; al-walda, 955; ænig, 1099; þa, 1151; feonda, 1152 (the supposed mark is that of αr -, 1168, shining through the page); ac, 2477; he, 2704.

Schücking adds to the list of vowels marked long till, 2721 and un(riht), 2739. But the mark over these vowels is quite unlike the mark of length: it occurs again over up, 2893.

The latest and most careful scrutiny of the MS. is that of Dr Sedgefield, and I have collated my results with his.

Of the vowels which I have classed as undoubtedly marked long, Sedgefield regards many as doubtful, and others as too uncertain to be mentioned at all.

- (a) Marked doubtful by Sedgefield: fáh, 1038; dón, 1116; hár,1307; ár, 1371; án, 2280; -bád, 2302; dóm, 2376; wís-, 2716.
- (b) Entirely omitted by Sedgefield: án, 100; mót, 442; sé-, 544; -fón, 911; dóm, 1528; gár-, 1962; síd, 2086; dóm, 2147; -stól, 2196; -pád, 2258; -wóc, 2287; -réc, 2661.

After careful and repeated scrutiny under a strong lens, I have no doubt as to the vowels in both these classes (a) and (b) being in every case marked long. Many of them appear to me even more clearly so marked than do some of those which Sedgefield agrees to be certainly marked long, such as sár, 975; stód, 2679; bán, 3147.

Of the vowels which I have classed as probable, bát, 742; bán-, 1116; blód, 1121; ár-, 1168; -swác, 2681 are classed as doubtful by Sedgefield: but gán, 1163; sé-, 1652, 1850; wát, 1863; gár-, 2043; hrán, 2270; gár-, 2674; -hróf, 3123; -hús, 3147, are regarded by him as too doubtful to be recorded at all.

The mark of length consists of a heavy dot, with a stroke sloping from it over the vowel. This stroke is very faint, and has often faded: in which case the mark of length can only be distinguished from an accidental blot by noting the position and shape of the dot, or by a microscopic search for traces of the stroke.

Complete certainty cannot be arrived at, since a stroke is sometimes perceptible only in certain lights. For example, after repeated scrutiny I had classed gar- (1. 2674) as one of the supposed cases of marking which might be dismissed. On a final examination I had to alter this, as I could make out the stroke fairly clearly.

Letters supplied in the text, but found neither in the MS. nor in Thor-kelin's transcripts, are printed within square brackets. When it is clear that the absence of these letters from the manuscript is not due to the damage which the MS. has sustained, and that the letters can never have stood there, both square brackets and italies are used. Other deviations from the MS. are indicated in the text by italics alone, and the reading of the MS. is given in a footnote. The term 'MS. reading' must not however be taken to imply that the letters can all be read in the MS. in its present condition; but only that there is satisfactory evidence that they once stood there.

Certain letters and words which, though found in the MS., were presumably not in the original, but were added by the scribes, have been placed between brackets thus: (bāra).

Long syllables which can be proved on metrical grounds to represent an earlier disyllable are marked by the circumflex: gan representing an older gaan or perhaps having been substituted for the cognate gangan.

2. The original text presumably had gefrugnon, the combination of consonants making the syllable long, as, in conformity with metrical law, it should be.

it should be.

5. Two distinct verbs seem to be confused in oftion: (1) *oftihan, 'to deny' (cf. Goth. teihan) construed with gen. of thing and dat. of person, as here; (2) *oftiohan, 'to tug, draw away' (cf. Goth. teihan) taking an acc. of the thing, as in L. 2489. [Cf. Sievers in P.B.B. xxix. 306.]

Whether oftiah mean 'denied' or 'drew away' the mead-benches, it equally indicates a reduction to servitude. Cf. I. 11 below, and the statement of Saxo Grammaticus concerning Scioldus that 'he subdued the whole race of the Allemanni and compelled them to pay tribute.' [Ed. Holder,

p. 12.]
6. eort[ax], Kemble 1: MS. eort. This correction seems desirable (1) metrically, because the type ± ≥ x ≤, though found in the second half-line (cf. ll. 463, 633, etc.), is not elsewhere found in the first; and (2) syntactically, because egsian is elsewhere transitive, and to take eort here as = 'many an earl' seems rather forced: 1. 796 is not quite parallel [cf. Sievers in P.B.B. xix. 560-576]. Yet eorl may be defensible [cf. Kock in Anglia xxvii. 219, etc.; xxviii. 140, etc.; Klaeber²⁴⁹]. p. 12.]

9. bara is presumably the addition of a scribe, being opposed to the usage of Beowulf both (1), metrically, since <code>imbsittendra</code> makes a complete half-line, and the preceding bara is not only otiose, but irregular [see Sievers in P.B.B. x. 256]; and (2), syntactically, since sē, sēo, bat is in Beowulf a demonstrative, and is very seldom used as a mere article. [See

Beowup a composers:

15. pst: MS. p, which is normally used as an abbreviation for pst.

Since the antecedent fyren-Searf is fem., some would take p here as an abbreviation for pst. 'the dire need which they had suffered.' Zupitza abbreviation for $\rho a$: 'the dire need which they had suffered.' Zupitza supports this interpretation of $\rho$, although dubiously.

aldor [$\vec{le}{lase}$. MS. defective; but there is no reason to doubt that the missing letters were $\vec{le}$. Holthausen, to avoid the syntactical difficulty of $\rho st$ (see above), reads $aldor-[$\vec{le}{las}]s[t]e$, and takes $\rho st$ as a conjunction: 'He [God] knew their cruel need: how that, before, they long had suffered want of a lord.' But we can take $\rho st$ as a conj. without this change: 'that, being without a lord, they had before experienced a long time of sorrow': for drugon lange holte of, 1.87, $\rho sign septode.$

18. Bēowulf. Not the hero of the poem.

18, 19. eafera is in apposition with Bēowulf. Trantmann, Heyne-Schücking and Holthausen follow the emendation of Kemble, Béowulf was brême, blæd wide sprang Scyldes eafera[n] Scede-landum in.

='the glory of the son of Scyld spread far and wide,' The alteration is not necessary [cf. Klaeber in Engl. Stud. xxxix. 428].

20. MS. defective. Grein's reading adopted in text.
21. MS. defective at corner. The respective merits of the restorations attempted by the earlier editors have been zealously canvassed ever since. These restorations are:

feorme, 'while yet in his father's support' [Kemble,];

þæt hine on ylde eft zewunigen

mades wil-zesipas, ponne wiz cume, lēode zelæsten; lof-dædum sceal bearme, 'bosom' [Bouterwek, Thorpe: so Holthausen 12]; wine, 'to his father's friends' [Grundtvig, 1861, p. 1];

ærne, 'in his father's house' [Grein: so Sedgefield, Schücking]; leofne, 'sustenance' [Trautmann].

We are dealing here, not with conjectural emendation, but with attempts to decipher a MS, reading which has been partially lost. The data which can still be ascertained are:

First a space $\binom{5}{16}$ in.) for two or three letters;

Then a fragment of a letter involving a long down stroke (i.e. either f, τ , b, or w; this letter was seen fully only by the five earliest transcribers or collators, who unanimously describe it as r; the fact that Thorkelin in his edition chose to read bina, and altered the r of his transcript to b in conformity with his theory, in no way invalidates this evidence);

Then something which can now be read either as m, in, or blank space followed by n (the earliest transcribers support only the readings m or in);

Then e.

Wine and some are, then, opposed to the evidence of the earliest transcribers, and cannot be read into the MS. even in its present condition, for they fail to make the line come up to the margin, which the scribe (with only the rarest exceptions, e.g. l. 1753) keeps precisely.

Leofne fills the space, but is syntactically faulty [of. Sievers in P.B.B. xxix. 306] and the f is inconsistent with the early transcriptions.

feorme gives unsatisfactory sense and is metrically impossible as involving double alliteration in the second half-line;

bearme fits exactly (the bea, for instance, of 1. 40 just fills the necessary f_g in.), and gives satisfactory sense, especially if, with Klaeber [J.E.G.Ph. vi. 190], we render 'in his father's possession': the young prince gives treasures from his father's store—which, as Klaeber (following Sievers) remarks, would agree excellently with Saxo's description of Scioldus: 'proceres...domesticis stipendiis colebat....

 Here and elsewhere, as Sievers points out [P.B.B. x. 485], metre demands, instead of the fem. gehwære, the form gehwam, which in the older language is used with feminines as well as with masculines and neuters.

81. āhte needs an object, expressed or understood. We may either supply mentally swēse gesibas or hi [Klaeber 148] or we may insert hi in the text: lange hi āhte, 'long he ruled them' [Holthausen]. Many emendations have been suggested in order to supply an object to āhte: lif in place of lebi,' the chief long possessed his life [Rieger 282]; lāndagas āhte, 'possessed these transitory days' [Kluge 183]; lan [or læn] geāhte 'possessed the grant, the land lent by God' [Kock in Anglia, xxvii. 223. For many other emendations and interpretations see Cosijn'; Bright in M.L.N. x. 43 (geweald for weold); Child in M.L.N. xxi. 175; Sievers in P.B.B. xxix. 308].

60. riswo[n], Kemble; MS. riswa. Kemble's emendation has been widely accepted. The change is exceedingly slight, of. note to l. 1176. Indeed in the Anglian original of Beowulf the final n of the oblique cases of weak nouns may already have been lost, and the scribe who put the poem into W.S. would not in that case recognize the form as a plural [Cosijn*]. Cf. note to l. 1548.

As the husband is a Swede (Headosciffing, of. 1. 2205) the coincidence between elan and the name of the Swedish king Onela is too remarkable to be overlooked, especially as it relieves us from having to postulate a Germanic princess with the extraordinary name of Elan. The reading of the text, which leaves the lady's name unknown, is therefore preferable to the theory [of Grein, Ettmüller, Sedgefield, etc.] which makes Elan the name of the queen, and supplies Ongentheow, father of Onela, as the husband:

There is no external evidence for either alliance: chronologically either is possible.

70. from n is an emendation of Grein, and Grundtvig (1861, p. 3). If in other respects we retain the MS. reading, 'greater' must be understood from micel in the preceding line. Parallels have often been adduced for this usage of the positive where we should expect the comparative. But Bright has shown [M.L.N. xwii. 181-3] that the clearest of these parallels [Psalms, 117, 8-9: Ps. 118 in our reckoning] is due simply to a literal translation of a biblical idiom, and that in other cases [e.g. Elene, 647] the text is very probably corrupt. Bright would alter the text here to medo-ærn micle mare gewyrcean ponne... 'a hall much greater than'.... See also Cosiin1.

yldo bearn, 'the children of men.' Such gen. pls. in o are rare, but undoubted. See Sievers, § 237, N. 4. [For a collection of instances, cf. Klaeber in M.L.N. xvi. 17-18.]

73. Cf. Tacitus [Germ. vii.]: 'The kings have not despotic or unlimited power.'

77. Edre mid yldum, 'presently amid men.' Earle's rendering 'with a quickness surprising to men' is forced.

78. Heorot is probably so named from the horns on the gable, cf. horngēap, 1. 82. But possibly horn simply means 'corner,' 'gable,' and horn-gēap 'wide-gabled' [cf. Miller in Anglia, xii. 396].

83. Two interpretations of lenge are offered:

85. Two interpretations of tenge are offered:
(1) 'the time was not yet at hand that...,' lenge being an adj. meaning 'pertaining to'; gelenge in this sense is not uncommon, but there is no certain instance of lenge, and to take 'pertaining to' in the sense of 'at hand' is forced. However this interpretation [Rieger. 287] has been followed widely, and recently by Schücking, Sedgefield and Holthausen 3.

(2) (2) lenge may be another form of the comparative adv. leng (Chair)

Or (2) lenge may be another form of the comparative adv. leng (Grein). The comparative here (where Mod. Eng. would use a positive) would be paralleled by ll. 134, 2555. The meaning would then be 'the time was not very distant.' [So Klaeber 246.] Holthausen, reads longe.

It is clear that we have to do with a compound, meaning 'son- and father-in-law,' comparable to suhtergefæderan (l. 1164), suhtorfædran (Widsith, 46), 'nephew and uncle.' All recent editors follow Trautmann in altering āḥum-swerian to ābum-swēorum; and it may well be that this was the original reading, and that the scribe misunderstood abum as 'oaths' and so came to miswrite and that the scribe minumensors by an action may be the series meaning a swerian, to swear. Yet swerian may perhaps be defended as = swerigum from *sweriga 'father in law,' a form not elsewhere recorded, but standing to sweor much as suhtriga to suhtor, both meaning 'nephew' (cf. Genesis, 1775, his suhtrian wif). [Bugge, Tidsskr. viii. 45-6 defended swerian, comparing Goth. broprahans and Icel. fedgar.]

The reference is to the contest between Hrothgar and his son-in-law Ingeld (cf. ll. 2020-69). Possibly the hall was burnt in this contest, which took place, as we know from Widsith, 'set Heorote.' But more probably 1. 82 refers to the later struggle among the kin of Hrothgar, when the hall was burnt over Hrothulf's head. See Index of Persons: Hrothulf.

102. gest. This ambiguous word may stand for gast 'spirit,' or giest, gist, gyst, 'stranger'; giest is, of course, akin to the Latin hostis, and sometimes acquires the sense of 'hostile stranger,' 'foe' (e.g. ll. 1441, 1522, 1545 sele-gyst, 2580 gryre-giest).

In Il. 1800, 1893 there can be no doubt that gest stands for giest, 'stranger.' In I. 2073 and in invoit-gest (2670) the word is connected with *stranger. In 1. 2075 and in *inert-gast (2070) the word is connected with meosfign 'to visit,' which makes it highly probable that it means giest and is used with grim irony. In the last instance we have confirmation from the fact that graye-giest is applied to the dragon in 1.2560; and I should be inclined also to take gast (2312), nid-gast (2699) as = giest, nid-giest. The dragon is not regarded as a spirit of hell, but as a strange phenomenon. Grendel and his mother, on the contrary, are regarded as diabolic spirits (cf. 1266); and when applied to them I take gast=gāst 'spirit' (102: wsl-gast, 1331, 1995: ellor-gāst, 1381, 1617). This is confirmed by the fact that Il. 807, 1621 give (ellor)-gāst, which can only mean 'spirit.'

In l. 1123 $q \approx sta = q \bar{a} sta$. 104. Moor and fen were the appropriate dwelling-places of misbegotten beings. Jordanes, recording Gothic traditions, mentions the offspring of witches and evil spirits: a race 'which was of old amid the fens.' Cf. note to 1. 426.

106-8. Sievers [P.B.B. ix. 137]:

...forscrifen hæfde (bone cwealm gewrse in Caines cynne ēce Drihten)...

'Had proscribed him amid the race of Cain (the eternal Lord avenged that death) for that he slew Abel.'

109. hb..hb hine = Cain. God, Cain.
112. orcnēas. The meaning 'sea-monster' is often attributed to this word (e.g. by Heyne and Schücking), on the theory that it is a compound, the first element connected with Icel. orkn 'as kind of seal' [of. Lat. orca 'as kind of whale'], and the second with O.E. eoh, 'horse.' [Kluge in P.B.B. ix. 188, in part following Heyne.]

But the context seems to demand 'evil spirit,' rather than 'sea-horse.' From the Lat. Orcus 'Hell, Death' was derived the O.E. ore 'giant' or 'devil,' as is proved by the gloss' orcus: ore, byrs of de hel-deofol.' Orc. neas may be a compound of orc with ne 'corpse' (cf. ne-fugol, 'carrion-bird,' Gen. 2158; dryht-neum, 'host of corpses,' Exod. 163; and Goth. nau, 'a corpse'). [See Bugges—22 and in Z.f.d.Ph., iv. 193; and cf. ten Brink 10; Sievers in P.B.B. xxvi. 428.]

120. Sievers [P.B.B. ix. 137] reads wera[s], 'the men knew not sorrow.' Some edd. put the stop after unhælo, 'they knew not sorrow, aught of evil.' But with this punctuation Grim and grading makes a very abrupt that with the stop after the property to doubt that with the stop after the property of which that with the stop after the property to doubt that with the stop after the property to doubt that with the stop after the property to doubt that with the stop after the property to doubt that with the stop after the property to doubt that with the stop after the property to doubt that with the stop after the property to doubt that with the stop after the property to doubt the stop after the property that with the property the property that with the property the property that with th beginning of the next sentence; and I see no reason to doubt that with unhalo can mean the creature of evil, Grendel'; cf. halo-bearn, 'Saviourchild' in Crist, 586, 754. [See also Klaeber, Christ. Elementen, in Anglia, XXXV. 252.]

128. sfter wiste, 'after their weal,' or 'after their feasting,' followed

128. s/ter wiste, 'after their weal,' or 'after their feasting,' followed lamentation. This seems a more likely interpretation than that there was lamentation concerning Grendel's feasting upon the thirty thanes. [Cf. Kock in Anglia, xxvii. 223.]

131. $\sigma_{\text{vij}}\text{0.5}$. Earle takes this as a noun, 'mighty pain,' 'majestic rage,' comparing feel. svi\text{0.5}$, 'a smart from burning.' Surely this is seeking trouble, for there is no evidence for any O.E. noun sviy\text{0.7}$, 'pain, smart,' whilst the adj. svi\text{0.7}$, 'strong, 'is common. It seems, then, natural to take \text{0.7}$\text{0.7}$ svi\text{0.7}$ as a sdj., 'strong in might,' parallel to earm-svi\text{0.7}$, \text{0.7}$\text{0.7}$ early \text{0.7}$ as a sdj., 'strong in might,' parallel to earm-svi\text{0.7}$, \text{0.7}$ which are indisputably adjs., meaning 'strong in arm,' 'strong in mind,' not nouns meaning 'arm-pain,' 'mind-pain.' Context too supports the adjectival rendering 'strong in might'; for it is at least as satisfactory here as 'mighty pain,' and more so in 1. 736, the only other passage where \text{prif}_{\text{0.7}$ sup\text{0.7}$ occurs. If we thus make \text{0.7}$\text{0.7}$ an adj., we have to take \text{0.7}$ between the prif-supper occurs. If we thus make \text{0.7}$ prime and \text{0.7}$ and \text{0.7}$ and \text{0.7}$ and \text{0.7}$ as intransitive. But there is no difficulty about this: cf. 1. 2499, and \text{Maldon}, 307. 133. It is not easy to be certain whether wergan, here and in 1. 1747, is the weak form of wērig, 'weary,' or is to be read short, werga, 'accursed.'
The latter seems to be the more probable. Cf. wergan, wyrgan, 'to curse' [and see Hart in M.L.N. xxii. 220, etc.; and Earle, 168].

154-5. sibbe and feorh-bealo feorran are possibly parallel, 'he wished not for peace, or to remove the life-bale,' the verbal phrase explaining the noun more fully, as in ll. 185-6, frofre...wihte gewendan [cf. Bugge 82; Klaeber 288]. We can, however, construe sibbe as an instrumental, in which case there should be no comma after Deniga: 'he would not out of compassion to any man remove the life-bale.' [Cf. Grein; Sievers, P.B.B. xxix. 317.]

156. fea. Kemble, normalized to feo, and has been followed by all the editors. Yet ža for žo is a common Anglian (especially Northumbrian) peculiarity. See Sievers 3 § 150. 3.

157-8. wēnan to, 'to expect from.' See Glossary: wēnan, and ef. 1. 1396.

158. beorhtre is, of course, not comparative, as taken by many editors and translators, but gen. fem., agreeing with bote, after wēnan. Kemble; miswritten in MS. bana. The error possibly arose through the influence of folmü (cf. 1. 2961); or possibly banā (=banan) in an older MS. was written with an open a and this, as so often, was wrongly transcribed as u (cf. 11. 581, 2821, 2961).

159. MS. defective. [Atol] Thorpe; [ac sē], without a period, Rieger 394. 163. hel-rūnan. The fem. hel-rūne, 'witch,' occurs in several glosses: the Gothic equivalent is recorded by Jordanes: Filimer, King of the Goths, found among his people certain witches, 'quas patrio sermone Haliurunnas is ipse cognominat' [Getica, cap. xxiv.]. It is not clear whether in this passage in Beowulf we have the fem., or a corresponding masc., hel-rana, not elsewhere recorded.

167-9. for Metode is generally taken 'on account of the Lord': cf. l. 706. hā Metod notide. Holtzmann (Germania, viii. 489) makes hē refer to Hrothgar:
'he could not touch his throne, his treasure, by reason of God's prohibition, nor have joy in it.' But this seems very difficult, since Grendel has been the subject for the last fifteen lines. Most probably, then, hē refers to Grendel, who 'was not suffered to outrage Hrothgar's throne by reason of God's prohibition: he knew not His mind' (i.e. the fate in store for him).

But the phrase may mean simply that Grendel is a fiend rejected by God, and hence cannot approach God's throne or receive a gift in the presence of his Creator. In this case, it is suggested by Klaeber [J.E.G.Ph. viii. 254] that ne his myne wise means 'nor did He (God) take thought of him (Grendel).' [Parallels for this are given by Klaeber, Christ. Elementen, in Anglia, xxxv. 254, e.g. Exeter Gnomic Verses, 162, wörlčas mon ond wonhigdig has ne gymed God.] Anyway the contrast is between the loyal thane who approaches the throne to do homage and receive gifts, and such a 'hall-thane' (cf. 1.142) as Grendel.

176. herg: MS. hrerg: Kemble, corrected to hearg: Grundtvig (1861, p. 6) kept nearer to the MS. by retaining the spelling herg. This heather term had perhaps become less intelligible when our MS. was transcribed, whence the scribe's error.

It has often been objected that these lines are not consistent with the Christian sentiments uttered by leading characters elsewhere in the poem: that Hrothgar, for instance, does not talk like a pagan (cf. e.g. Il. 1724, seq.). Attempts have been made to harmonize the discrepancy by supposing that the Danes are regarded as Christians, but as having in time of stress relapsed, like the East Angles in the seventh century. [Klaeber, Christ. Elementen, in Anglia, xxxv. 134: Bright in Routh's Ballad Theory, 1905, 44, footnote.] But this supposition is unnecessary, for such Christian sentiments as Hrothgar or Beowulf do utter are vague and undogmatic, not unlike the godly expressions that Chaucer puts into the mouth of his pious heathen. [See Introduction to Beowulf.]

mod-ceare, the emendation of Trautmann 187, is unnecessary [cf. Sievers in P.B.B. xxix 321]: mail-ceare is probably acc. after sead, 'brooded over the care'; but might be instrumental, 'seethed with care' [Earle].

194. fram hām: 'from' indicates that Beowulf's home is different from the seene of Grendel's deeds: Earle rightly renders 'in his distant home.'

Cf. 1. 410.

197. ben can bear the alliteration because emphatic.

204. [r]ō/ne is the conjecture of Rask [Grundtvig.⁵⁷⁰] and is certain. The MS. is defective: only the lower part of the first letter is left, and this may have been r, b, f, s, or w. The letter must have been only half legible even in Thorkelin's time; transcript A has bofne, B forne.

CERT TO MEN (Sund-wadu sonte, 1. 208, means 'he proceeded to the ship,' not necessarily 'went on board.') We must therefore either translate 'led them to the land-boundary' (the shore) [cf. Sievers in P.B.B. xxii. 322; Klasber 41], or we must [as has been suggested to me by Mr Grattan] take the phrase wisade land-gemyrcu quite generally: Beowulf 'was their pilot on this expedition.

Cf. 1. 2409.

219. an-tid: MS. an tid. Grein, ān-tid f. = hora prima, 'erste Stunde,' comparing 'non-tid' hora nona. Cosijn [P.B.B. viii. 668, following Ettmüller] contends for an-tid=and-tid or ond-tid, 'corresponding time,' 'the same time,' so that the phrase would mean 'about the same hour of the second day. Sievers [P.B.B. xxix. 322, etc.] regards āntid as 'due time,' comparing O.N. eindagi, 'agreed time, term,' and points out that ymb, when used to mark time, means rather 'after' than 'about'; hence: 'after the lapse of due time, on the next day.' Earle arrives at the same rendering, though on different grounds, which to me are not clear.

224. coletes. The word occurs here only. The sense seems to demand 'sea'; 'then was the sound traversed at the far side of the sea.' Yet this passive use of liden is difficult—a difficulty which Thorpe sought to avoid by reading sund-tide & -ide at ende, 'the sea-sailer (i.e. boat) at the end of its watery way.' Bugge [Tidsskr. viii. 47] interpreted 'stormy sea' [O.N. &, 'storm'). But the first element, eo, in colet may, by the Anglian confusion of $\check{e}o$ and $\check{e}a$, be the same as $\check{e}a$, 'river' (Lat. aqua, Goth. ahwa). Others suppose the word to mean 'labour' (cognate with Greek $\check{e}\lambda a\acute{\nu}\nu\omega$), or else to be a mere 'ghost-word,' the result of a scribe's blunder. [Sedgefield 286.]

263. lias-scaweras, the MS. reading, meaning 'evil spies,' has been emended to liaus sociaueras [Ettmüller,, Thorpe, followed by all the older editors]. But this gives a type of line (Expanded D*) which, unless with double alliteration, is unparalleled. It seems therefore better to keep the MS. reading.

So abusive a word is surprising in the middle of an otherwise courteous conversation. But, perhaps, the drift is, as Sievers suggests: 'It is my duty to (ic secal) enquire: tell me, rather than (sr), by going further, bring yourselves under suspicion of being false spies.' 262. Holthausen; reads Wss min [fröd] fsder: Holthausen; Wss min fsder folcum [feor] geegybed. This improves the alliteration. From the point of view of scansion alteration is not essential, since a personal pronoun can take the stress; cf. ll. 345, 346, 353, 1934, 1984, 2160. This is read a mere license, but usually corresponds to a fine shade of meaning. not a mere licence, but usually corresponds to a fine shade of meaning.

> dēd-hata. Grein hesitated whether to regard this word as dēdhata, 'one who hates or persecutes by deeds' [so Grein,] or dea hata, 'one who promises deeds.' Earle adopts the latter reading, and translates 'author of deeds.' The former is, however, the more probable: hatian means not merely to hate but 'to pursue with hatred, persecute'; cf. 1. 2466 [see Klaeber 260].

'a change of the trouble. [So inclinates had seegened: arready in 1801 Grundtvig (p. 117) took the passage in this way, though retaining the spelling edwendan, which he interpreted as a noun = edwenden.] The emendation edwenden is exceedingly probable, since the verb edwendan occurs nowhere else: for in 1.174, where the MS. gives edwendan, it is necessary to read this as edwenden; him edwenden...bealuwa bisigum has been suggested: cf. 1, 318, sida gesunde, and 1, 2170, nida heardum.

297-9. lēojne mannan and swylcum may refer to the whole band, 'to whomsoever it shall be granted' [Kemble, Thorpe]. For a full defence of this rendering see Klaeber 200: lēojne mannan would be a singular used collectively: of. cord (l. 795), spēlinge (l. 1244). Most recent translators make of ll. 299, 300, an assertion relating to Beowulf: 'to such a valiant man it will be granted....' It has been objected that this is to attribute to the coast-guard a statement which is absurd—a view refuted 'by all the brave men who have ever fallen in battle' [Rieger 285]. Yet he may reasonably say 'Valiant men like your captain are destined to win.'

302. sāle, Ettmüller; cf. ll. 226, 1906, and 1917, and modern 'riding on a hawser.' It has been suggested that the MS. reading sole is not impossible, and that it might be interpreted as from sol, mod. Kent. sole, 'a possible, and that it might be interpreted as riom sot, mod. Acht. sote, 'a muddy pool.' But surely this is a libel upon the Cattegat.

803, etc. scionon=scinon, 'they shone,' by u-umlaut, just as riodan (l. 3169)=ridon, 'they rode' (Sievers § 376): there seems no sufficient reason to reject this explanation, and, with Grein, to invent a verb scinan, sccon, or with Sedgefield to take scionon as an adj. (=scienan, 'bright'), agreeing with eofor-lic.

where m will cheek guards,' Ettmüller₃, Gering [Z.f.d.Ph. xii. 128; he compares cinberg, Exod. 175]: MS. hleor beran. If we retain the MS. reading we must either take beran = b # ron, 'they bore over their faces,' or else, with Grein, assume a noun hleor-bera, 'visor'; Sedgefield, reads ofer hleopu bëran, 'they bore, over the hill-sides....'

The latter part of 1.305 has been widely read ferh wearde hëold, 'the pig' (ferh for fearh, parallel to cofor-lic) 'held guard': but the expression ferh, 'pig' for cofor, 'boar' is strange [Cosijn']. The reading of the text ferthwearde heold (ferh for feorh) involves a rapid change from pl. to sg.: but in O.E. poetry this is no insuperable difficulty. Translate 'the gleaming and tempered [helm] held guard of life over the valiant man (gūpmēdgum men).

The MS. reading, gapmod grummon, hardly admits of interpretation. If a verb, grummon must be from grimmon, 'to rage, roar,' which gives no satisfactory sense; the meaning 'hasten' is generally applied to it here, but this is forced; why should 'to roar' mean 'to hasten'? And gabmod as subject $(=g\bar{u}bm\bar{v}d(i)ge$ 'the valiant ones') is almost equally unsatisfactory, even if we follow Kemble and alter to gub-mod[e].

Sedgefield suggests grimmon (Dat. pl.), 'over the fierce ones': Bright

The straightening out of this passage, so far as it admits of explanation, is mainly due to Bugge 83 [and in Z.f.d.Ph. iv. 195, etc.], who proposed: eofor lic-scionon fah ond fyrheard ferh ferh-wearde heold güb-mödgum men.

'The boar, over the visor, adorned with gold, gleaming and tempered, held guard of life over the valiant man, fair of body (lic-scionon).' Bugge's Both Gust of the Set interpretation, at least of II. 305, 306, seems likely, and has been adopted by Schücking and Holthausens; of. Klaeber 45.

viii. 71; Trautmann: adopted by Holthausen is simple and final. A similar bad spelling occurs in the Dream of the Rood, 117: the MS. has unforth, which is nonsense, and has been emended to anforth 'timid.' Such scribal mistakes were easily made at a period when, the top of the a being left open, it was hardy distinguishable from u: another example is vudu for wadu, below (1. 581). For anhar, cf. ansund (1. 1000).

867. glædman, indisputably the MS. reading: Thorkelin's transcript B reads glædnian [cf. Rieger 888].

Bugge⁸⁴ defends glædman, quoting the gloss 'Hilaris: glædman.' The best interpretation of the word seems, then, to be 'cheerful.' Other suggestions have been that it is the oblique case of a noun glædma, 'gladness,' or that it should be read as two words, glæd man. Glæd, 'gracious,' is a stock epithet of princes. Grundtvig's emendation [1861, p. 13] glæd-möd is followed by Holthausen, 2 and Sedgefield.

368. wig-getawum. Note the spelling here, and in 11. 395, 2636: the editors generally alter into the more usual form wig-geatwum, etc., and this emendation is supported here by metrical considerations. Geatwe is generally supposed to be a corruption (Sievers; § 43, N. 4) of getäve. It would seem, then, that the more primitive form, getävum, has been, by a scribal error, inserted here, although the metre shows that the form actually used was the corrupt geature. Yet it has been maintained that the two words, geature and getthue, are from distinct roots (geature cognate with frature; getthue with tawian, to prepare). If so, they were certainly confused and interchanged by the scribes. [Cf. von Grienberger in Z.f.ö.G. 1905, 753.]

372. cniht-wesende, uninflected; see note to 1.46, above.
373. eald fader: MS. ealdfader. This compound, meaning 'grandfather, ancestor,' occurs in the forms ealdfader, ealdefader; but its use here is a strain to the meaning of the passage, and we may safely assume that the scribe has run two words into one, as in numerous other instances. Eald fæder makes excellent sense.

Holtzmann [Germ. viii. 490] showed, by a parallel passage from the Egils saga, how the hearth was in front of the high seat in a Germanic hall. Beowulf, before the throne of Hrothgar, would then be on or near the hearth.

Geotena. Many editors alter to the normal form Geata. But (1) the dialectal confusion of so and sa [Sievers, § 150. 3] is peculiarly apt to survive in proper names, and (2) weak and strong forms of proper names alternate; Bēaw compared with Bēowa exemplifies both changes. Gēotena is, then, a conceivable form, and the MS. reading should be retained.

Those who hold that the Geatas are Jutes have seen in this form a confirmation of their theory; and (though I do not share that view) this is an additional reason for not tampering with the MS. reading.

445. To avoid the difficulty of the alliteration falling on the second element in the compound, Schücking reads mægen-hrēð manna, 'the pride of men.'

Hrādas is an ancient epic title of the Goths: it became Hrēdas by false analogy with hrēd, 'glory'; but the term Hrēd-nenn here cannot signify 'Goths.' It may possibly refer to the Geatas, whose king is Hrēdel, in which case a comma must be inserted after dyde. But I rather take it to mean the Danes, part of whose kingdom is in Icelandic called Reid-Gotaland; this gives a more satisfactory sense: 'he thinks to treat the Geatas as he did the Danes.' Cf. l. 601.

446. hafalan hydan, referring to the rites of burial. It does not necessarily follow, as has been argued, that there is any reference to the custom, once prevalent, at any rate in Scandinavian countries, of covering with a cloth the face of the dead [Konrath in Archiv, xcix. 417].

That Beowulf is declining a guard of honour (heafod-weard), as Schücking

457. F[or gewyr]htum: MS. fere fyhtum. Grundtvig (1861) suggested F[or w]ere-fyhtum, 'for defensive fighting.' More than a dozen emendations have been proposed: that in the text is by Trautmann [in his edition: have been proposed: that in the text is by Trantmann [In nts edution: otherwise Trantmann¹⁶³], and we must render, with Klaeber [J.E.G.P.h. v. 191], 'because of deeds done,' i.e. owing to the ancestral ties mentioned below. [Cf. also Sievers in P.B.B. xxxvi. 401; Klaeber⁴⁵³]. Thorpe, followed by Schücking, reads fore fyhtum, and emended wine to friend, so as to alliterate. But the error obviously lies in fere fyhtum, which should be, and is not, parallel to ond for ār-stafum [Sievers, P.B.B. ix. 188].

459. Holthausen, followed by recent editors, reads for metrical reasons, 1255. — 2472.

Klaeber262 translates 'thy father brought about by fight the greatest of feuds.' Schücking, following Klaeber, similarly renders gestean, 'durch Schlagen verursachen.' But (1) gestean conveys an idea of finality, and means 'to schieve' rather than 'to cause' by blows; and (2) since Eegtheow escapes safely, and the Wylfingas have to be content with a money payment from a third party, such ineffective vengeance could not be described as from a third party, such ineflective vengeance could not be described as the greatest of feuds; for the honours go to the side which last slays its man. I take the fish to be a blood-feud preceding and culminating in the slaying of Heatholaf, by which slaying Eegtheow 'achieves' the feud: cf. Widsith, 38, Offa gealog cynerica mast, 'won, achieved by blows, the greatest of kingdoms.' [For geslean cf. Kock in Anglia, xxvii. 226-7.]

489-90. ons ml... seegum: MS. on sml meoto sige hred seegu. The MS. reading has in the past been very generally defended [e.g. by Leo, Heyne, Bugge in Tidsskr. viii. 292, Grein₂, Dietrich, Wülker, Kluge¹⁸⁸], and is retained by Trautmann¹⁵⁴: ons label has been taken as the imperative of the verb, and meoto as fem. sg. (Grein, Sprachschatz) or neut. pl. (Grein, Bugge) of some word not elsewhere recorded, meaning either 'measure,' 'thought,' or 'speech': so onsel meto-erelax the ties of etiquette' or 'unknit thy thoughts.' The difficulty is that a verb, unless emphatic, should not take the alliteration. Those who retain the MS. reading generally take sigehrēð as an adj. = sige-hrēðig, 'victory famed' (so Heyne, Trautmann: but it is surely a noun), or make sigehrēðseegum one word.

Holthausen suggested [Z.f.d.Ph. xxxvii. 114] on salum weota sigehredgum

The reading on shi meeta sige-hrēð secga [Klaeber in J.E.G.Ph. vi. 192] is an improvement upon Holthausen's, being much nearer to the MS., and giving better sense: 'in joyful time think upon victory of men.' This has aince been adopted by Holthausen₂. The verb "metian is not elsewhere recorded, but may be inferred from the Goth. mittin, 'consider.' Sedgefield, suggests on shi mate sighterfülj secgum: 'when time suits speak, victorious one, to the men': Sedgefield₂ on shium the (award) sighträð Cosijn10 would read Sigehredsecgum = Hredmonnum = 'unto the Danes.' 499. Unferd: always written with an h in the MS., although alliterating with vowels.

505. gehēdde. This is usually interpreted 'obtain' or 'achieve,' and is explained either as a compound of hidden, 'to hide' (Bosworth-Toller; cf. Il. 2235, 5059), or of hēdan, 'to heed' (so Sedgefield). But it may be, as Holthausen (who reads gehēgde) and Schücking suppose [cf. Sievers, P.B.B. ix. 293], from gehēgan (l. 425), 'to carry out,' in which case mērda = 'deeds of glory.' Grein adopted all three interpretations in turn.

507. sund fitte. The older editors took this as one word, 'swimming contest.' It is better, however, to render 'didst strive in swimming.' [Cf. Bugge in Tideskr. viii. 48.]

516. wylm[e], Thorpe: MS. wylm. The alteration is demanded by the metre, and betters the sense; wylm[um] or [burh] wintrys wylm have also been suggested.

519. Heabo-Rēmas, Grein₁: MS. heaboræmes. The most correct form of the name, Heabo-Rēamas, occurs in Widsith (l. 63) and some editors would substitute it here.
520. &&el: MS. X. The O.E. name of this runic character X was Edel; hence the character is used here and in 1. 913 for the word edel.

525. Either we must take wyrsan as gen. pl. for wyrsena, a form which would be extraordinary, but not quite unprecedented (cf. flotan and sceotta, 548. ondhwearf: MS. 7hwearf; for the use of this symbol with compound verbs, cf. 7swarode, l. 258. Grein takes hwearf to be an adj., which he glosses 'versatitis,' volubilis,' and compares Icel. hwerfr, 'shifty,' 565. Some grammarians have seen in mēcum (l. 565), sweordum (l. 567), mægum (l. 2858), perhaps mägum (l. 2814), hēafdum (Rood, 63), etc., a survival of an old instrumental singular. This, however, is exceedingly doubtful [cf. Osthoff, I.F. xx. 163-218].

1. 1074, bearnum ond bröfrum. Similarly here the plural has become almost an epic formula, which is used, although logically inaccurate, since Breca's sword had no share in this slaughter. [Cf. Cosijn11. This seems better than to suppose with Heinzel that Breca and Beowulf together slaughter the monsters, and that the apparent inconsistency with the preceding lines, 544, etc., where the separation of Beowulf and Breca is told, is due to that O.E. 'harking back,' which he justly emphasizes. See A.f.d.A.x. 220.]

572-3. 'Fate often saves a man if he is not doomed, and if his courage holds.' The paradox is a favourite one in Germanic literature. Cf. ll. 670, 1056, 1552, where Beowulf is saved by God and his mail; Laxdela saga, xv., where two fugitives, crossing a swollen river in winter, are saved because they were brave and because longer life was granted to them. [Of. Klaeber in Archiv, cxv. 179.] Cook [M.L.N. viii. 118] quotes many parallels for the dogma that 'hap helpeth hardy man,' including Andreas, 459, etc. (which may be imitated from this passage).

574. Hwsbere. Some critics [e.g. Bugge in Tidsker. viii. 48] have objected that there is no need for any contrast here. Sievers [P.B.B. ix. 138] justifies the text, comparing the Mod. Eng. use of 'however,' resuming after a digression, without, necessarily, any idea of contrast.

pressed, either here or in 1. John and 1707.

648. [ne], Thorpe's simple emendation, now generally adopted. Bugge [Tidsskr. viii. 57] proposed, in addition, to regard obde (l. 649) as equivalent to ond, as in 1. 2475, and the suggestion was adopted by Heyne: 'and the darkness of night ('was' understood, Bugge's) over all.' This is more satisfactory than Earle's defence of the usual meaning 'or': 'There is something of alternative between twilight and the dead of night.' Trautmann's and or atternative between twiling and the dead of night: Trautmann. and Holthausen regard gescon [ne] meahton as metrically incorrect. It is unusual, but not quite without precedent. [Cf. Sievers, P.B.B. x. 234, and l. 1504.] Holthausen, gescon [ne] meahton; Holthausen, gescon [ne] magon.

651. wan has changed its meaning from 'dark' to 'pale.' The modern meaning is inappropriate here. In other phrases, such as 'waters wan,' the appropriateness of the adjective has been rather increased by the change in meaning.

one of the arguments of Müllenhoff¹¹⁸ against unity of authorship. The discrepancy is only apparent. The Danish hall had never before been entrusted by its king to a stranger. [For the explanation of this, and similar 'inconsistencies,' cf. Jellinek and Kraus in Z.f.d.A. xlv. 265, etc.]

Beowulf is the subject of behēold, ābēad.

Sedgefield reads abad and takes ecton-weard as referring to Beowulf: 'the watcher against the monster stayed behind.'

669. trūwode. The metre demands trēowde instead of the Southern form trāvode, here and in ll. 1533, 1993, 2322, 2370, 2540, 2953. In l. 1166 trāvode has been retained by the scribe. [Cf. Sievers in P.B.B. x. 233.]
670. mõdgan may refer to God, or to Beowulf, or may agree with magnes.

673. irena. Metre demands that the second syllable should be long [cf. note to l. 6]; hence here and in l. 1697 Sievers corrects to irenna (cf. il. 802, 2259) [P.B.B. x. 308; xxix. 568].

707. s[c]yn-scapa, Grein: MS. synscapa. If we keep the MS. reading, the parallel of man-scafa (l. 712) favours the derivation of the first element from synn, 'crime,' rather than (as in sin-hers, syn-snæd) from sin-, 'in-cessant.' But the alliteration is incorrect [cf. Schröder in Z./.d.d. xliii. 365-6]. The second element in a compound noun is the less important, and therefore should not take the alliteration when the first does not, and accordingly Grein, followed by Holthausen, Trautmann¹⁸⁴, Schücking, emended to scinscaba, or scyn-sceaba, 'spectral foe.'

719. headran häle we may render 'with worse omen' [Holthausen in Anglia, xxiv. 267], or 'with sterner greeting.' If we read headran häle, 'braver men,' we have an exceptional type of line [cf. Sievers in P.B.B. x. 275]. Holthausen, after numerous earlier attempts, finally (ii. 170) reads heardran hæle[scipes], 'more doughty valour,' Schücking heardran hæle[bas], 'more doughty champions.' [For other conjectures of Bugge³⁶⁸, Traut-

The contention that the simple form is preferable, because whilst brinan usually governs the dat., gehrinan more commonly takes the acc., can be met by reading kethrlān (kthriban takes the gen. and would therefore such the context). This excellent suggestion was made by Grundivig in 1820, but has been generally overlooked.

(Beowulf) received him (Grendel) with hostile intent,' i.e. he did not flinch or try to avoid the attack but came to grips with Grendel whilst still lying down. This is the best rendering of onfong, and is the situation implied in 11. 750 ff. Against this it is objected (Schücking) that invit has a signification of malice and treachery which makes it unsuitable to Beowulf, and that we should render: 'Beowulf took, perceived, his (Grendel's) treacherous hostility.' Cosijn's conjectures invit-pancalum (dat. of adj. invit-panca, 'hostile in intent,' referring to Grendel). Grein took inwit-panc as an adj. agreeing with 'Grendel' understood: but in the five other passages where the word occurs in O.E. poetry it is a substantive.

749. við earm gesæt has been taken to mean (1) that Beowulf settled upon Grendel's arm [so, e.g., Clark-Hall]; (2) that he propped himself on his own arm [so, e.g., Grein, Gummere]. The second meaning is supported by The Harrowing of Hell, 67 (Christ and Satan, 432). Mr Grattan writes to me: 'Have you never tried to throw off a bigger man than yourself who has got you down? Beowulf is at a disadvantage, having been attacked while supine. He, with great difficulty, of course, gets one shoulder up, supported on one arm; and later, when his grip has alarmed the aggressor and caused him to pull away, he succeeds in getting on to his legs (l. 759). When once he has done this, Grendel's chance is up. Beowulf gets a clean grip on him (1. 760). All this is the language of wrestling, which is employed again later in the struggle with Grendel's mother.'

752. scatta. Many editors normalise to scatta. But see Sievers, § 280.
756. gedræg, 'tumult': the word can be used both in an abstract and in a concrete sense, 'noisy bearing' or 'a noisy assembly.'

769. calu-scerven. A similar word, medu-scerven, coours in the Andreas (1526). The meaning apparently is 'terror as at the loss of ale,' mortal panic.' Confusion has ensued because (through an early and ale, 'mortal panic.' Confusion has ensued because (through an early and remarkably long-lived error) the word in the Andreas has been read meaduscerpen. On the theory that this was the right spelling, a derivation from scearp, with the meaning of 'sharpening, ferment, bitterness,' has been advocated by Sedgefield; von Grienberger in P.B.B. xxxvi. 84; and Baskervill in his Andreas]. Wülker's facsimile of the Vercelli Book shows clearly that the right reading in the Andreas (as in Becountly is scerven [cf. Sievers in P.B.B. xxxvi. 410; Klaeber in Engl. Stud. zliv.

Apparently we must connect the word with bescervan=bescerian, 'to deprive,' a 'deprivation of mead' being synonymous with the greatest distress. Bugge [Tidsskr. viii. 294-5] connects with scirian, 'to dispense' (taken ironically, 'they were given to drink of a deadly wine').

770. ren-vecardas. This has usually been read rën (=regn) weardas, 'mighty guardians': of. regn-heard in 1.326. Holthausen and Klaeber [J.E.G.Ph. vi. 193] have independently suggested that ren=ern=srn, 'house,' by the common metathesis of r (Sievers § $ 179, 17; rendegn [ren-pegn] acdis minister occurs in the Erfurt Glossary. 'The guardians Context demands the meaning 'flame' and this is supported by the forms sweled [see Bosworth-Toller] and sweeled [Anglia, viii. 452], both of which are given in glosses as equivalent to cauma ('burning') vel assus. The meaning 'smoke' often attributed to these words [Dietrich Z.f.d.A.v. 216] is possibly and to accommodate the sweeled of the sweeled with the sweeled that a wedding a wedding a wedding. due to an attempt to connect the word with sueobol, 'band, swaddling cloth,' through the meaning of 'enveloping smoke.' 804. formoren, not that Grendel had 'formoren,' 'remounced' the use of swords, but that he had 'laid a spell' on the swords of his foes. If we translate formoren as 'forsworn' then hē must be Beowulf: others tried to and trusted to his grip! This is quite a possible rendering, for although below (1.805) his must again refer to Grendel, such rapid transitions can estily be paralleled in O.E. syntax.

The reading hāton is much easier than hāt on, and 1. 1423 turns the probability in its favour. No weight can be attached to the spacing of words in the MS.

850. The MS. reading deeg has been explained as 'dyed' (Grein) or 'concealed himself' (Heyne after Leo), but no verb $d\bar{c}agan$ with either meaning is recorded in O.E.

Cosijn's, whilst supporting Sievers, suggests tentatively that the MS. may be right, and that $d\bar{c}og$ is a noun= $d\bar{c}ag$, 'dye.' Kemble, had already suggested deag. Considerations of O.E. style favour our taking deagfage deog or deop as parallel to brim weallende, etc.

However deof, the Northern form for deaf, from dafan, 'dive,' an emendation of Zupitza [Archiv, lxxxiv. 124-5] and, independently, of Trautmann 172, has been accepted by all recent edd.

868. guma gilp-hlæden. Certainly not 'bombastic groom,' as Earle: gilp has not necessarily in O.E. any such evil signification: of. ll. 640, 1749. Translaté 'laden with glorious words'; or perhaps simply 'proud' or 'covered with glory' (as Klaeber 689, who compares gylp-geornest [Bede i. 34], translating gloriae cupidissimus).

870-1. word öper fand söde gebunden, 'framed a new story founded upon fact' [Clark-Hall]. But it is possible, as Rieger 200 and Bugge [Z.f.d.Ph. iv. 208] thought, that ll. 867-874 are all one sentence, and that these words form a parenthesis ('word followed word by the bond of truth,' Earle). Cf. Hávamál: orð mér af orði orðs leitaði, 'word from word found me word.'

Háwamál: orð mér af orði orði leitaði, 'word from word 10und me word. Yet, though we may delete the stop in 1. 871, we need not therefore, with Rieger and Bugge, alter seeg to seegan: for cyninges þegn, guma gitþalsaden, and seeg would all be parallel, subject of ongan styrian: eft (l. 871) would go with hvilum (l. 867), echoing the hvilum of 1. 864, just as in 11. 2107-11 hvilum.....hvilum...hvilum eft. The alteration is unnecessary.

901. It has been usual to begin a new paragraph with siddan: 'After Heremod's warring time had slackened off, he'....(Clark-Hall, Earle, etc.). The punctuation given above is strongly advocated by Klaeber '57. So Gummere, who comments: 'Heremod, one is told, might have rivalled and surpassed Sigmund, but the former fell from grace, turned tyrant, and in fact was precisely what the aspiring hero should not be—quite the opposite, say, of this glorious Beowulf.' Sigemund is the greatest wrecca since

In 1. 902 he must refer to Heremod [not to Sigemund, as Müllenhoff¹¹⁹, Riegers and others have taken it]. Heremod's story is continued; just as in the parallel passage, l. 1197, etc., sy boan Hāma stwsz, the story of Hama is continued in ll. 1200-1. In each case the poet drags in allusions rather forcibly. But that the connection between Heremod and Sigemund rather forcinly. But that the connection between Heremod and Sigemund is not fortuitous, or the work of our poet, is shown by their being also mentioned together in the Old Norse. See Index of Persons: Heremod.

eotenum. The word eoten has occurred several times in contexts where 'monster,' 'giant' was applicable. Here for the first time such meaning seems very doubtful, and we must assume either (1) that from 'giant' the generalized sense of 'enemy' has come into force [Rieger 399: Holthausen] or (2) that the word here in a personal name distinct from the common noun.

(2) that the word here is a personal name distinct from the common noun, perhaps signifying 'Jutes.' [See Schücking for references.]

905. Note the faise-cencord. Many edd. unnecessarily alter.

908. etc. The sid (perhaps = 'going into exile') of Heremod is a disappointment to the wise, who had hoped that he would be a credit to his country.

916. The story is resumed, with a repetition of incidents which, to the older critics, seemed the result of interpolation. Müllenhoff 120 compares

11. 916, etc. with 864, etc.; 917-8 with 837; 918 with 838; and 920 with 840. 'Fallow' seems more appropriate to horses than roads (cf. 1. 865), and

Cosiin16 would accordingly emend to fealwum.

924. medo-stigge, see note to l. 1085. 926. stapole. The obvious meaning is 'column' (cf. l. 2718), and so Heyne took the word here: 'he stood beside the central (wooden) pillar of Heorot.' Heyne was thinking no doubt of the 'Branstock,' the central oak which plays its part in the story of the Volsung hall. Schücking and others still adhere to this interpretation, or to a parallel one which would make the stanol correspond to the 'high seat pillars' of Icelandic halls [Sarrazin, Anglia, xix. 370].

But (1) 'beside,' though possible (cf. l. 1117), is not the most obvious meaning of on, (2) we have no evidence for any great middle pillar or high seat pillars in Heorot, and, above all, (3) this would necessitate our supposing that Grendel's hand had been placed among the rafters, but it seems from

1. 983 to have been outside the hall.

Miller [Anglia, xii. 398] therefore interpreted stapol as the steps leading up to the door or the landing at the top of them, his authorities being an O.E. gloss, and the Mid. Eng. use of the word: he steire of liften stoples. In his annotated hand-copy of Beowulf, Miller further quotes instances from the O.E. translation of Bede of stopol='footstep,' step,' and notes the parallel of the Odyssey [iii. 404]: Nestor seated on the 'smooth stones' before his door. The same interpretation has been arrived at independently

Rask's emendation on stabole = 'foundation,' 'base,' has been revived by Bugge90 and Trautmann, but is unnecessary: and unsatisfactory too, for 'he stood on the floor or ground' seems but a feeble remark.

930. grynna has been variously interpreted as 'snares' (= O.E. grin) or 'sorrows' (= O.E. gyrn). The latter interpretation is probably correct, for grin, 'snare,' is concrete, meaning 'halter' or 'net': the abstract sense, 'capturing,' given to it here by Earle, can hardly be demonstrated.

986. gehwylcum. This very slight change [Kemble,] from MS. gehwylcne, though necessary, has been overlooked by most commentators. Klaeber [Engl. Stud. xlii. 326] argues strongly in its favour: 'a far-reaching woe unto every councillor' is supported by the comparison of 1. 170, etc. Schücking in his last edition [1913] also adopts gehwylcum; so Holthausens.

If we retain the MS. reading we must interpret it to mean that the court had been scattered by Grendel's attacks, which is clearly not the case (cf. 1.171, and passim). And apart from this the passage presents serious

Trautmann and Holthauseng further adopt the emendation [of Greing], wideofen, which they interpret 'driven away.' 988. 'Looked up over' or 'in the direction of the high roof, and saw....' [Of. Klaeber²⁰⁰.] See l. 836, note. 985. This line was first correctly divided from the preceding line by stiðra næala stūle gelicost.

The details of Sievers' reading had been anticipated by earlier editors [Ettmüllers, Thorpe]. His reconstruction is satisfactory, and is now generally adopted [e.g. by Holthausen, Trautmann, and with modification, stid-negla gehwylc, 'each of his sharp nails,' by Sedgefield]. But as the reading of the MS. seems possible, it is here retained in the text [as also by Schücking].

spora is elsewhere a weak masc.; Rieger 350 would read speru, 'spears'; so Holthausen, spelling hand-speoru (u-umlaut).

987. egl (more usually egle) is well authenticated in the sense of 'awn,' 'beard of barley': but nowhere else do we find it in the derived sense of 'talon,' 'claw.' Accordingly many take the word here as the adj. egle, 'hateful,' 'grievous' (Goth. agls, 'shameful,' aglus, 'difficult'), agreeing with speru or sporu, and either suppose the u of eglu to be elided, or else restore it: egl', unheoru, Rieger³⁰¹, Schücking, Holthausen: eglu, Trautmann. For both words of. ail in New English Dictionary.

988. him must refer to Grendel, whom everyone said no sword might injure—unless [with Sievers, P.B.B. ix. 139, Holthausen, and Sedgefield] we read be for bet (MS. *) in 1. 989. In that case it refers to Beowulf, who, having torn off Grendel's claw, might be expected to be proof against anything.

Neither of these meanings gives very satisfactory sense: gesacan seems otherwise unrecorded, and is unmetrical [Sievers in P.B.B. x. 291].

Kemble's gesēcean has accordingly been generally accepted. 'Though a man would flee it, he must seek the grave' is one of those truisms which lend themselves to the hypothesis of a didactic interpolator. [Cf. Mullen-editors retained the MS. reading, and attempted to remedy the obscurity by devices of punctuation. Wyatt in 1894 read:

> Bugon þā tō bence blæd-agende, fylle gefægon; fægere geþægon medo-ful manig magas þara...

and commented "What is to hinder the antecedent of bara being implied in bl#d-āgende, in speaking of a court where everyone was doubtless related to everyone else, as in a Scotch clan?" With this interpretation the bl#dagende, who take their places on the mead-bench, are the Danish nobility agency, who take their places on the mean-beaut, are the Janish monity generally: their kinsmen, who empty many a cup, are Hrothyar and Hrothylf. But it may be objected (1) that the task of emptying the cups would not be confined to Hrothyar and Hrothylf; (2) that the point of the allusion is not that Hrothyar and Hrothylf are akin to the Danish nobility (blæ-agande), but that they are akin to each other, and are, as yet, true to the ties which kinship imposes (cf. ll. 1164-5).

1022. hilte-cumbor. Ettmüller, hilde-, followed by Rieger 991, Holthausen, Trautmann and Schücking (1913): hilte-cumbor perhaps gives satisfactory sense, 'banner with a handle' [cf. Cosijn¹⁸], but it is very difficult to account for hilte instead of hilt. [Cf. Sievers in P.B.B. xxxvi. 420.]

Cosijn18 justifies the punctuation, as given above. There is something of a pause before mære māðbum-sweord, the final gift, is mentioned. We might almost render 'and finally a glorious sword.'

1026. scotendum, Kemble; MS. scotenum. Kemble's emendation has been generally followed, especially by recent editors. Grein, scoterum. 1030-1. wala, emendation of Ettmüller, adopted by Grein: MS. heafod beorge wirum be wunden valan utan heold. If we leave the MS. reading unaltered there is a choice of difficulties. Either we must take walan as subject and hēafod-beorge as object, with a striking violation of grammatical concord in the verb hēald; or we must (with Heyne and Social) take hēafod-beorge as a weak fem. noun in the nom. and valan as object, with considerable loss to the sense. The nom. pl. scür-beorge (Ruin, 5) also tells against the latter view, which has no support from analogy. The emendation has accordingly of late been generally adopted. Sievers, Bugges Trautmann and Segfeld prefer the more archaic form walu (Goth, walus, 'staff'). The change is slight, as in many scripts u and a can hardly be distinguished.

1032. Fēla. Holthausen, 2 and Sedgefield [following Rieger, Lesebuch] normalize to fēola: unnecessarily. See Bülbring, 199 b.

1361...meahton. So the MS. Since lāf is collective, it may quite conceivably be the subject of a plural verb meahton. But almost all editors feel bound to correct what they regard as a false concord. Earlier editors chose to emend lāf to lāfe, because lāf is not now in the MS.: our authorities for it being merely Thorkelin's two transcripts. But, from the position of the to emend $l\bar{a}f$ to $l\bar{a}f_e$, because $l\bar{a}f$ is not now in the MS.: our authorities for it being merely Thorkelin's two transcripts. But, from the position of the word, it must have been perfectly clear, when these transcripts were made, whether the reading was $l\bar{a}f$ or $l\bar{a}f_e$. Therefore to write $l\bar{a}f_e$ to agree with meahton is practically as violent a departure from MS. authority as to write meahte to agree with $l\bar{a}f$: and since the former change lands us in metrical difficulties [of. Sievers in P.B. S. x. 273-4], it is best, if we make any alteration, to write $l\bar{a}f$, .meahte [following Thorpe].

1033. sc $l\bar{a}r$ -heard. Cf. Judith, 79: sc $l\bar{a}r$ -me heardne. Various interpretations are offered: 'tempered in water' (of. 'the ice-brook's temper,' Othello, v. ii. 258]; 'hard or sharp in the storm of battle,' 'outting like a storm.' [Cf. M.L.N. vii. 193; viii. 61; xix. 234.] But I doubt if sc $l\bar{a}r$ does more than intensity: 'mighty hard.' Cf. Minot, x. 43: Full swith redy servis fand 'pa' bare a schowre, i.e. 'a great quantity, sbundance.'

fand pai pare a schoore, i.e. 'a great quantity, abundance.' 1037. under coderus. The same expression is used in the Heliand (of the court of the High Priest, into which the 'earls' led Ohrist: that léddum ina...erlos undar ederos, 4943).

1056. Ettmüller takes wyrd as in apposition with God: so Sedgefield,, who objects to the usual construction of wyrd as object of forstode (see Glossary), because wyrd cannot be hindered or averted. But this seems open to dispute, both grammatically (since if, with Sedgefield, we render forstode 'help, defend,' we should expect hie not him) and theologically (since God is wyrda waldend, Exodus, 432; Andreas, 1056; Elene, 80).

1064. Jore, 'In' the presence of': cf. 1. 1215, and Widsith, 55, 140, where the phrase is used, as here also, in connection with a minstrel's song. 'Healfdene's war-leader,' in whose presence the song is sung, should then be Hrothgar. Or possibly we may take hildewisan as dat. pl., referring to the old captains who had fought under Healfdene. The phrase would then be equivalent to for dayabe, 'before the veterans' (1. 2020). Trautmann suggests Healfdena. [Cf. also Klaeber in Anglia, xxviii. 449, note; Trautmann. Cosi in the phrase of the conserving' [Crain Tehrical Cosing Pares].

mann: Cosinia ..., To interpret fore as 'concerning' [Grein, Jahrbuch f. rom. u. engl. rescue the emendation of Trautmann 183 eaferan for eaferum: rendering 'made mention of the children of Finn, when the sudden attack fell upon them, a tale which was a hall-joy adown the mead-bench.'...It is less satisfactory from the point of view of style to make the lay begin, as in the text, with l. 1068; but it enables us to keep eaferum, which we must take as instrumental: 'At the hands of the children of Finn...the hero of the Healfdene, Hffsef, was doomed to fall.' [See Klaeber in Anglia, xxviii.

The emendation Healfdenes [Grundtvig 253, Kemble], usual in editions up to and including Wülker, is unnecessary and misleading, since Healfdene is presumably a tribal name. [See Bugge²⁵ and Index of Persons.]

upon one another, and therefore must be considered together. See Index of Persons, and Introduction to Beowulf. Only the more isolated problems are dealt with in the notes which follow.

1074. Apparently Hildsburh lost only one brother. It seems unnecessary to see, with Möller, a survival in bröörum of an ancient dual construction, parallel to wit Scilling, 'Scilling and I' [V.E. 59]. Cf. note 1079. All editors follow Ettmüller, in altering he to heo, making her he[o] Er meste heold worolde wynne refer to Hildeburh. This is not necessary. Finn lost his thanes where he had had the greatest joy in the world, i.e. in and around his mead hall.

1081. featur. The original form must have been feam; the u has been inserted on the analogy of other datives.

1083. gefechtan. Klaeber [Anglia, xxviii. 448], followed by Holthausen, suggests gebecotan, 'offer fight' (cf. 1.603), on the ground that with gefechtan, with a dat. of the hostile person, is not a permissible construction. Rieger (Lesebuch), Holthausen, a wip gefechtan. See also Introduction to Becowulf; Finnsburk.

The g of hig simply marks that the t is long, precisely as in M.B. and other scripts ij=i. Other examples are hig, ll. 1596, 1770; wigge=wige, 1656, 1770, 1783; sig=si, 1778; medostigge=medostige, 924; wiptig=witig, 1841 (wrongly 'corrected' by many editors into wittig); ligge=lige, 727; Scedenigge=Scedenige, 1686. See Sievers, § 24, N., and for pronunciation of g, § 211, etc.; [also Cosijn in P.B.B. viii. 571].

1087. healfre. Unless, with Ettmüller, and Thorpe (followed by Trautmann, Holthausen, Sedgefield), we read healfne, we must take this as a gen. dependent upon exceptd. 'control of half the hall.'

dependent upon geweald, 'control of half the hall.

1097. With elne unfitme, Guthiac, 923, elne unsläwe, has been compared: unfitme or unhitime (l. 1129) is obviously an adv., but its form, meaning, and derivation are doubtful. It may mean 'indisputably,' from fittan, 'dispute,' or 'immovably,' from fittan, 'float'; or, if unhitime be the correct form, it may mean 'by evil lot' and be connected with hlytm (l. 8126). It is, of course, conceivable that both forms, unhitme here and unfitme below, are correct, and represent different words. [Cf. Bugge 30, unfitme below, are correct, and represent different words. [Cf. Buggess, Trautman128, von Grienberger in Z.f. 5. 6. 1905, 748-9.]

1101. gemānden. This may mean 'nor should they ever break the treaty,' and be parallel in meaning to wāre ne brāce. No such gemānan 'to violate an oath' is recorded, but the phrase māne āb' a perjured oath' (of. mān, wickedness, and 'mansworn' in the Heart of Midlothian) is very common. (So Grein, Bosworth-Toller, etc.)

More probably, however, this is either the verb mānan 'to mention' or mānan 'to bemoan,' and we may render (1) 'they (i.e. people in general, and particularly the Frisians) should not mention it although the Danes were following the slayer of their lord,' i.e. the Danes are not to be taunted [Heinzel in A.f.A. x. v. 192], or (2) 'they (the Danes) should not bemoan, [Heinzel in A.J.A.A. xv. 192], or (2) 'they (the Danes) should not bemoan, although....' If we adopt (2) we must (since it is Finn's oath we are considering) render best 'upon condition that,' and bonne 'then on the other hand.' [Cf. Klaeber in Anglia, xxviii. 444.]

1102. bana must mean 'slayer,' not merely 'foe,' as Heinzel takes it [A.f.d.A. xv. 192]. It does not follow that Finn slew Hnæf with his own hand. The achievements of the retainers are attributed to the chief, as Tacitus tells us.

 1104. frēcnan, Thorpe: MS. frecnen.
 1106. Unless we are to understand some word like 'decide'—a rather violent proceeding-something must, as Sievers supposes, be missing here: or perhaps the necessary infinitive to scolde is concealed in the word syddan. Holthausen suggests snyddan, 'restrain,' or swydan, 'confirm': Trautmann, and, independently, Sedgefield, sehtan, 'settle': Klaeber [J.E.G.Ph. viii. 255] sēman, 'reconcile,' or sēdan, 'declare the truth,' 'prove,' 'settle'.

1107. Ao. The emendation ad, 'the pyre' [Grundkvig²⁸⁵], has had its supporters in recent times. As Klaeber points out [J.E.G.Ph. viii. 256], it is more natural that the gold should be fetched from the hoard in order to

tegs. The meaning 'costly' or 'massive' which has been suggested for this word is, of course, pure guess-work. It has been proposed to emend afunce-gold, on the analogy of incge-lafe, 1. 2577, where see note [Singer in P.B.B. xii. 213; so already Rieger, Lesebuch]; or itge, 'bright,' not found in O.E., but of. Isel. itr, 'glorious' [Holthausen]; but of. also Anglia, Beiblatt, iii. 864]; or $\overline{E}e$ (a word found once on a runic inscription and supposed to mean 'one's own,' hence, 'domestic wealth') [Klaeber in J.E.G.Ph. viii. $651. or to write andice as one word - 'avoiting envy', 'you Grienberger in Sievers in P.B.B. xxxvi. 421]; or ondiege 'openly', not elsewhere recorded, but of. and Eges, 1. 1935, and Goth. and Eggs,' openly' [Buggets], Sedgefield,]. Holthausen, takes icge=idge 'eager.' 1114-7. The emendations here, mostly quite uncertain, are too numerous to record. Holthausen's čame on eazle is very probable: Hideburh commanded her sons to be placed on the pyre 'by their uncle's (Hmsf's) side.' The tragedy of Finnsburh lies in the slaughter among hinsfolk. The relation of uncle to siziar's žon was the most sacred of Germanic ties (see below, I. 1136, note), and that the poet should emphasize that Branches was us probably an Anglian II. which the W.S. transcriber

Much the same meaning is produced by Sedgefield's emendation, $\bar{\rho}a\bar{m}$ for $\bar{\rho}\bar{a}$: 'until a second year came to dwellings (i.e. to men) as it (the year) still does come to those who are continually watching the seasons.' But see Glossary: weotian. That sele means 'time' 'season' is pointed out by Cosijn 20.

1142. worold-rædenne. How does Hengest 'not refuse the way of the world? The current explanation has been that it means 'he died' [e.g.

Grein: cf. Heinzel in A.f.d.A. x. 226].

Clark-Hall [M.L.N. xxv. 113] suggests 'he did not run counter to the way of the world, i.e. he fell into temptation, and broke his oath to Finn.
[Cf. Klaeber, Christ. Elementen, in Anglia, xxxv. 136.]
Those who suppose that Hengest entered Finn's service with treacherous intent (Bugge, Earle, etc.) favour the emendation worod-radenne (not elsewhere found: taken as signifying 'allegiance' from weorod, 'retinue').

Schücking puts comma after gemunde, and renders swā... 'in such wise 1143. hitle-toma is probably the name of the sword which Hunlafing places in Hengest's bosom. See Introduction to Beowulf: Finnsburh.

This is generally interpreted as referring to Finn: e.g. by Clark-Hall: 'His flickering spirit could not keep its footing in his breast'; that is 'he died.' For welfers of a spirit about to depart, of. 1. 2420. But it is more in accordance with O.E. siyls that it. 1130-1 should be parallel to ll. 1149-50. Hence Bugge [Tidsskr. viii. 295], following Ettmüller, 'the spirit (of the attacking party, Guthlaf and Oslaf) could no longer restrain itself.'

1151. roden, 'reddened,' 'stained by the life-blood of foes,' Bugge [Tidsskr. viii. 64, 295]: MS. hroden 'covered.' Bugge's emendation [supported by Sievers, in P.B.B. ix. 139, xxxvi. 407 and Klaeber, in Anglia, xxviii. 445] is made for metrical reasons (cf. l. 2916), to prevent the superfluous double alliteration in the second half line, and is almost certainly correct: he compares Andreas, 1005, dead-wang rudon.

11. 60, 1510, 1883, 2307. Beowulf is meant, who has been adopted by Hrothgar (Il. 946 etc.) [cf. Klaeber²⁴⁴]. The letter should be compared in which Theodoric the Great adopts a king of the Eruli as his son in arms, sending him gifts of horses, swords, shields, and other war-trappings, and instructing him in the duties of his new relationship. [Cassiodorus, Variae 1178. mēdo. Both Thorkelin's transcripts, A and B, read medo: MS. defective at edge. Editors have usually normalized to mēda, but we have afready had a gen. pl. in o (see 1. 70). Such gen. pls. are most usually found in mass. and neut. nouns: but cf. pāra minra ondswaro in Epist. Alexand. 423 [Anglia, iv. 155]; hyndo in l. 475 is perhaps also a gen. pl. 1186-7. Holthausen compares Tacitus [Germania, xx.]: sororum filis.

idem apud avunculum qui apud patrem honor: and this close tie between the maternal uncle and his sister's sons is of course a feature of many primitive tribes (see note to ll. 1114-7, above). But Hrothulf is son, not of a sister, but of the brother Halga, himself a mighty sea king: he has claims to the succession which the queen justly fears. See Index of Persons: Hrothulf.

1194. earm-rēade: so MS.; Grein; earm-[h]rēade. For the occasional absence of initial h, especially in the second element of compounds, see Sievers, § 217, Bülbring § 526.

1198. hord-mādm: MS. hord madmum. Almost all editors have emended to māddum [Grein.] or mādm [Grundtvig, 1861]. The emendation is here adopted (though the spelling mādm is retained) because (1) a dat. mādmum can only be construed with difficulty, (2) $m\bar{a}\bar{b}m$ is metrically superior, and (3) a scribe, having in his original the archaic form $ma\bar{b}m$ or madm, and 1199. bere, Ettmüller₂: MS. here. Apart from difficulties of meaning, a compound here-beorhtan would be impossible here for the alliteration; cf. note to 1. 707.

1200. sinc-fæt. On the analogy of gold-fæt (Phænix, 302) the meaning 'precious setting' has been proposed [Klaeber, J.E.G.Ph. vi. 194].

flah, Leo, Grundtvig (1861), Cosijn [P.B.B. viii. 559], Buggee: MS. falh. "Flāh gives an easier construction and is confirmed by the fact that, according to the saga, Hama in reality fled from the enmity of Eormenric."

The emendation is accepted by recent editors. See Index of Persons: Hama, 1201. Two explanations of 'he chose the eternal counsel, welfare' have been suggested. (1) 'He went into the cloister,' as Hama does in the Thidreks saga. This, it is objected, is hardly a likely interpretation in so early a poem as Beovulf. The retirement of the hero to a monastery seems indeed to be a motive found most frequently in French Romance. Yet, since we know of early Anglo-Saxon chiefs, e.g. King Ethelred of Mercia and Eadberht of Northumbria, who did end their days in the cloister, it may have been a motive also in O.E. poetry. (2) The meaning 'he died' is suggested: similar cuphemisms for death are common. Bugge' and Klaeber [Christ. Elementen, in Anglia, xxxv. 456] combine both meanings: 'he went into the monastery, and there ended piously.'

But in l. 1760, and in Exodus, 515, the phrase \vec{ece} r\vec{\vec{e}}das seems rather to mean 'counsel such as will lead to eternal benefit,' without any connotation of either the monastery or the grave. Professor Priebsch suggests to me that the pions \vec{ece} r\vec{\vec{e}}d, \vec{ece} r\vec{\vec{e}}das has in both places in Beowulf been substituted by a monkish copyist for some other phrase. This seems very possible.

stituted by a monkish copyist for some other phrase. This seems very possible.
 1206. wēan āhsode, 'he went in search of trouble.' [Cf. Klaeber in M.L.N. xvi. 30.]
 1210. feorh, 'the body': cf. l. 1152. That Hygelac's body passed into the possession of his foce is confirmed by the fact that his bones were shown, much later, near the mouth of the Rhine, presumably in the neighbourhood of this last fight. There seems no necessity to alter, with Sievers, to feak [P,B,B. ix. 139; cf. Bugge⁶⁰].

1212. rēafedon, Ettmüller,: MS. reafeden; the pl. indic. in en does occur in O.E. dialects, but so rarely as to make it probable that here it is only the late scribe's error.

1213. guð-sceare. On the analogy of inwitscear (l. 2478) it seems that the 'cutting' or 'shearing' implied by scear is that of the sword of the foe, not the metaphorical dividing of Fate. Translate then 'after the carnage' rather than [with Earle, Clark-Hall] 'by the fortune of war.'

1214. Cosijn²¹ would read Halsbege onfeng Wealhofeo mabelode, 'Wealhtheow took the necklet and spake': he objects that 'noise' is out of place here: we should expect silence for the speech of Wealhtheow (of. ll. 1698-9).

1223. MS. side corrected from wide.

1224. windgeard, weallas: MS. wind geard weallas. The suggestion of Kemble, windge eardweallas, has been very generally adopted, and is still retained by Sedgefield. But such an instance of the alliteration being borne by the second element in a compound seems unprecedented. [Cf. Krackow in Archiv, cxi. 171.] So it is best either, with Schücking and Holthausens, to retain the MS. reading, interpreting 'the home of the winds, the cliffs' (cf. 1. 229), or to emend with Holthausen, 2, following Ettmüller, windge weallas, on the analogy of 1. 572.

1225. Most recent editors put a comma after speling, making it a vocative. It seems to me that such breaks in the half-line are to be avoided wherever possible. Cf. ll. 130, 2188, 2342. But see Klaeber⁴⁸⁷.

Hence the word has several times been misread farode. 1257. lange prage. The 'higher critics' point out that there is a discrepancy between this 'long time' and the shortness of the time which does, in fact, elapse before Grendel's mother executes her vengeance.

Grandel's mother: and even should we, with Thorpe, Grein, and Holthausen, emend to help, selo, there remain passages like 1. 1879, where Grendel's mother is called fela-similar secg. The poet is inconsistent, thinking sometimes of the female sex, sometimes of the daemonic power, of the monster. Ten Brink97, 110 saw in this confusion traces of an earlier version in which Beowulf fought under the water with two monsters, one female, and one male-Grendel's mother and Grendel.

hwader: MS. hwaher. Ten Brink% [cf. Möller, V.E., 186] saw in hwaher, which of the two,' a confirmation of his view that there had been a version representing Beowulf fighting under the water with both Grendel and his mother, and that what Hrothgar here states is that he does not know which of the two is the assailant [cf. Schücking₁]. But unless we are prepared, with ten Brink, to regard ll. 1830-1 as an isolated fragment of such a version, out of harmony with its present context, we must read not 'I know not which' but 'whither': since it appears from the context that Hrothgar has no doubt as to the personality of the assailant, but does not know her exact retreat (cf. 11. 1333, 1339)

We may therefore (1) retain hwaper, attributing to it the meaning of hwider [Heyne, Holthausen], for which no precedent can be found; (2) emend to huzder, a form of hwider, of which examples are elsewhere found, see Bosworth-Toller [Grein₂, Heyne₃, Cosijn²²⁻³, Sedgefield, Schücking₃, etc.]; or (3) smend to hwider [Sweet₁, Grein-Wülker, etc.]. The via media (2) seems preferable.

1363. Many unsuccessful attempts were made to explain hrinde till Morris, editing the Blickling Homilies, found there, in a passage (p. 209) which he supposed to be imitated from these lines in Beowulf, the expression hrimige bearwas, 'trees covered with frost.' The restoration of hrimige in the text here was generally accepted.

But the English Dialect Dictionary drew attention to the fact that the word rind, meaning 'hoar-frost,' was Stiff Chrent in the North of England; hrinde is then presumably correct, and is a shortened form of 'hrindede, meaning 'covered with frost,' as was pointed out independently by Mrs Wright [Engl. Stud. xxx. 341] and by Skeat. Hrinde would be connected with hrim, 'hoar-frost,' as sund with swimman: a new sample for the transition from md to nd [of. Holthausen in I.F. xiv. 339].

It is strange that whilst recent editors frequently restore into the text ancient forms which the later scribes refused to admit, yet here, when the scribe, by a curious oversight, seems to have copied the early 8th century form wundini, 'with twisted gold,' most editors refuse to accept it, and modernize to wundnum.

Wundini is instrumental, parallel to binumini and similar forms in the early Glosses. [Cf. Sievers, Der age. Instrumental, in P.B.B. viii. 324, etc.] That a 10th or 11th century scribe should have written an 8th century form here is strange, but that he did so must be clear to anyone who will look at the MS. : the d is now covered, but the next letters are either mi or ini, certainly not um. (This was noted by Zupitza, and before him by Holder; Thorkelin's transcript A has rundmi; B, wundini.) The scribe in any case would hardly have copied the old form except through momentary inadvertence. But surely to suppose, with Buggess, that he wrote this mi or ini by error for num is less reasonable than to suppose that he wrote it because ini (often not distinguishable from mi) was in the MS. which he was copying.

In that case Beowulf must have been already written down in the 8th century and our MS. must be derived (no doubt with many intermediate stages) from this early MS. In any case it is surely no duty of an editor to remove from the text an interesting old form, from which important helm can mean 'protection,' 'refuge,' 'covering' [cf. Schröer in Anglia, xiii. 835], but is in that case usually followed by a gen., as in helm Scyldinga, etc. Hence the old emendation holm, 'sea,' is defended by Cosijn'2. An example of helm without the gen. dependent on it appears in one of the Hymns [Grein, ii. 294; Grein-Wülker, ii. 280] helme gedygled.

1418. winum Scyldinga. The expression is more usual in the sg., referring to the king alone [ll. 30, 148, 170, etc.), but that it can also be used of the more distinguished retainers seems to follow from 1. 2567. See also note to 1. 1342 [and cf. Klaeber in J.E.G.Ph. vi. 195].

Holthausen in Anglia, Beiblatt xiv. 49], 'traveller through the waves' [CosijnB; also in M.L.N. ii. 7, 1887], 'off. spring of the waves' [von Grienberger, P.B.B. xxxvi. 95: cf. Sievers in P.B.B. xxxvi. 481], or 'piercer of the waves', from borian, 'to bore' [an old interpretation adopted recently by Sedgefield; but of. Sievers, Anglia, xiv. 135]. The emendation wBg-fara, 'the wave-farer,' has been suggested [Trautmann, followed by Holthausen, 1]: wBg-fara is not recorded, but wBg-faru is. The word wBg-dara, the wave-farer,' has been suggested [Trautmann, followed by Holthausen, 1]: wBg-fara is not recorded, but wBg-faru is. 1449. mengan may possibly mean 'mingle with, visit,' as usually interpreted: but 'mingle together, stir up' seems a more likely rendering, in view of the common use of gemenged = 'disturbed' (cf. ll. 848, 1698). [Cf. Klaeber in M.L.N. xvi. 16.]

1454. brond in the sense of 'sword' is found, though rarely, in O.E.: brandr with this meaning is common in O.N. Critics who object to the parallelism of brond and beado-mēcas have suggested brogdne beado-mēcas, brandished battle-knives' [cf. Cosijn²4: so, too, Trautmann, Holthausen, Sedgefield].

1456. Gyle Hrödyāres: Unferth.
1457. haft-mēce. The weapon used by Grettir's adversary in the Grettis

The emendation of Cosijn [P.B.B. viii. 571], ater-terum for ater-tearum, *poison drops,' has been supported by Andreas, 1833, earl attre gemäl, 'the poison stained arrow' [Cosijn's], and by a close O. 1488. Unferd: MS. hunferd. 1489. wag-sweord. The many emendations suggested are not satisfactory, nor necessary, for 'sword with wavy pattern' seems to explain the word adequately, although an exact parallel is nowhere found. [Reproduc-1508. bēah, Grein: MS. bæm. Grein's emendation makes good; sense. The majority of editors follow Grundtvig (1861, p. 52), reading bee, but are not agreed whether to take no with he bas modig was or not: and neither rendering, 'he was,' or 'he was not, brave enough to wield his weapons,' gives a very satisfactory sense. Schücking and Sedgefield, read bar.

1610. swe[n]cte, Kemble,: MS. sweete: the n, which probably in an older

MS. was signified simply by a stroke over the e, has been omitted: cf. l. 1176.

1512. It is not clear whether $\bar{a}gl\bar{s}can$ is nom. pl., 'the adversaries annoyed him,' or sg. (gen. or acc.), 'they annoyed their adversary.'

1518. [in], Thorpe. nid-sele, 'hostile hall.' Grein, followed by Heyne and Buggess, reads nio-sele, 'hall in the deep.'

1518. Ongeat. Here the discrepancy is a more real one than usual. The monster has seized Beowulf at the bottom of the sea, and carried him to her hall, powerless to use his weapons. Yet ll. 1518-22 give the impression that Beowulf enters the hall, able to fight, and there, by the light of the fire, sees Grendel's mother for the first time.

Gummere, following Jellinek and Kraus [Z.f.d.A. xxxv. 273], denies that the course of the action is hopelessly confused: 'Beowulf, overwhelmed by the first onset of Grendel's mother, is dragged to her lair, and on the way is beset by monsters of every kind. Managing to extricate himself from the coil, he finds he is in a great arched hall, free of the water, and has only the mother of Grendel before him. He takes good heed of her, and prepares his attack.

But the difficulty of this explanation is that nothing is said in Beowulf about the hero 'extricating himself from the coil.' The language of 1. 1518 would rather lead us to suppose that the hero meets his adversary for the first time within the cave. This is certainly the case in the Grettis saga, and is probably the original form of the story.

1520. hond, Bouterwek [Z.f.d.d. xi. 92], Grein₁: MS. hord. Sweet, swenge hond, without explanation. The dat. swenge seems strange: we should expect the acc., and many editors accordingly alter to sweng here. 1522. gist. The 'stranger' is Beowulf.

1529. an-rad. Here, and in l. 1575, it does not seem certain whether we should read anrad, 'resolute,' or (with Holthausen and Schücking) anrad

1630. Hyllices. On metrical grounds it is to be presumed that the original Eeovulf had the Northern form of the name, Hygllices [cf. Sievers in P.B.B. x. 463]. This has nearly everywhere been altered by the scribes to Hugelac. We have here a survival of the older spelling: Hūlāc standing for Hygião as Wilaf for Wiglaf (l. 2852). [Cf. Klaebertee.] 1631. wunden.mäl, Kemble; MS. wundel.mäl. Cf. note to l. 1616. 1634. don for don, disyllabio. Cf. gán (= gáan or gangan) below, 1537. [f]eaze, Rieger: MS. eazle. Rieger's emendation betters the alliteration, and has been adopted by Sweet, and by recent editors. Those who retain the reading goda in 1. 758 would however be justified in quoting that line as a parallel to gefeng pā be eazle. To me feaze appears also to give better sense: but this may be disputed. Mr Wyatt writes: 'William Morris agreed with me that it debased Beowult's character, turning a wrestle into an Old Bailey brawl. Hair-pulling is a hag's weapon.

1541. and-lean, Rieger⁴¹⁴: MS. hand lean. Rieger's emendation has been accepted by recent editors, to allow of the word alliterating with eft.

The same scribal blunder appears in 1. 2094, where again the alliteration demands the vowel: ondlean. Cf. also ll. 2929, 2972. 1543. oferwearp: if we retain the MS. reading, with the nominatives strengest and fele-cempa referring to Beowulf, we must translate of erwearp, 'stumbled.' But no other instance is to be found of this intransitive use of of erweorpan. Hence the emendation of Ettmüller, fele-cempan: and of Cosijn24, wigena strengel: 'she overthrew the prince of warriors, the champion' (cf. 1. 3115). The added n is the slightest of alterations (see note to reswan, 1. 60), but even this is not essential, since febe-cempa might refer to Grendel's mother.

[For a defence of oferwearp = 'stumbled,' see Schücking in Engl. Stud.

1545. seax, Ettmüller, followed by all recent editors except Schücking: MS. seaze. The emendation is not absolutely necessitated by the accusatives brād, brūn-ecg, which follow, for such a false concord as an apposition in the acc. following a noun in the dat. can be paralleled. Cf. l. 2703 [and Klaeber 200]. It is more conclusive that getcon seems elsewhere always to take an acc.

1559. [wss] supplied by Grundtvig on and Kemble.

1570. The light, mentioned in Il. 1516-17 (as also in the Grettis saga), flashes up when Beowulf slays the monster. But lēoma has been taken as 'the flashing sword' [cf. Meissner, Zf.d.A. Ivii. 407], and, since the 'sword of light' is common in story, this seems not unlikely.

1575. ān-rād. Holthausen, Schücking and Sievers [Zf.d.Ph. xxi. 362] read an-rād, 'with forward thought,' 'pushing,' 'brave.' Cf. note to l. 1539. 1635. We may take to the forest thought in the latter case the exact force of to pas be is difficult to define: 'he had paid him recompense for that;... insomuch that he now beheld him...' [Earle]; 'he paid him back...to that degree that...' [Clark-Hall]; 'paid him back...where he saw him lying' [Schücking: cf. Satzverknup/ung, 58].

1589. hē refers to Grendel.

1590. The subject of becearf is Beowulf: hine refers to Grendel. Though Grendel, according to ll. 801-3, 987-90, cannot be wounded by the sword of Beowulf or his companions, there is no inconsistency here, since this is a magic aword. [Cf. Jellinek and Kraus in Z.J.d.d. xxx. 28, etc.] The decapitation of a corpse is frequent in the leclandic sagas: it prevents the ghost from 'walking' and doing mischief; and such a motive may, as Gering supposes, be present here also.

1591, etc. An attempt has been made to make the story run better by postulating a misplaced leaf, and suggesting that ll. 1591-1605 originally followed 1. 1622. [See F. A. Blackburn in Mod. Phil. ix, 555-566.] But the story really runs quite well, and the order is the same as in the Grettis saga.

1599. ābroten, Kemble₂: MS. abreoten. 1602. sētan, Grein₂, following Grundtvig²⁰⁰ sēton: MS. secan. A very 1604. Cosijn [P.B.B. viii. 571] praises the 'common sense' of the English editors for having taken wiston as=wyscton, 'wished.' So Kemble, wiscton; Sweet wyscton. Recent editors make no alteration in the text, but regard wiston as = $w\bar{y}$ scton. Cf. Sievers, § 405, N. 8. [Some parallel cases for the disappearance of the c are quoted in Engl. Stud. xxvii. 218: cf. also A.f.d.A. xxiv. 21.] That wiston is to be interpreted 'wished' is confirmed by the fact, pointed out by Klaeber 488, that wyscat ond wenat is a formula found in Guthlac, 47.

To interpret wiston as 'knew' would necessitate a blending of two constructions: wiston would require ne gesawon: ne wendon requires gesawon only. Of course we might assume that the two constructions had been confused-confused syntax is common in Beowulf: or we might assume that ne had dropped out after the ne of selfne—'they knew, and did not merely expect, that they should not see their lord himself again.' But this gives, after all, only a feeble sense. For why, in that case, did they wait?

1610. wāl-rāpas. Grundtvig a, not understanding wāl, conjectured wāg-rāpas, which would have the same meaning: 'wave-ropes, ice, icicles.' This was followed by many of the older editors, and was even adopted by Sweet (Reader). It is unnecessary, for wāl, 'a deep pool,' occurs not infrequently, the best-known instance being in the Cottonian Gnomic Verses, 39: leax sceal on will emid sciote scridan, 'the salmon must go darting in the pool.' The word is also found in other Germanic dialects, in Scotch ('whyles in a wiel it dimpl't,' Burns, Halloween), and in the North of England.

1616. bröden for brogden. The application of this term to a coat of mail (ll. 552, 1548) shows that the meaning must be 'woven,' 'intertwined': and the analogy of wunden-mail (l. 1531) or hring-mail (ll. 1521, 1564, 2037) shows that this is applicable to a sword. It must refer to the damasked, intertwined patterns on the blade, or possibly to the adornment of the hilt.

1677. gylden hilt. It has been suggested tentatively [Kluge in Engl. Stud. xxii. 145] that this is a proper noun—the name of the sword: the same name is borne by Roll's sword Gullinhjalti in the Saga of Rolf Kraki. But there is no question here of a complete sword, but only of the hilt: cf. Il. 1614, 1668. [See also Sarrazin in Engl. Stud. xxxv. 19: Lawrence in Pub. Mod. Lang. Assoc. Amer. xxiv. 2, 242-4.]

1686. Sceden-igge: MS. scedenigge in one word. It refers to Schonen (Skåne), now the southernmost province of Sweden, but at this date, and indeed much later, an integral part of Denmark: Sconia est pulcherrima visu Daniae provincia—Adam of Bremen. It seems to be used here as a name for the whole Danish realm.

1688, etc. Müllenhoff 180 was doubtless right in seeing in these lines a reference to the flood, in which the race of giants and descendants of Cain was destroyed. Cf. Wisdom, xiv. 6, 'For in the old time also, when the proud giants perished, the hope of the world, governed by thy hand, escaped in a weak vessel. Cf. ll. 113, etc., 1562. It is rather fanciful to suppose (as is often done) that there is any reference to that struggle between Gods and Giants which we find in Teutonic mythology.

How Grendel's kin lived through the deluge we need not enquire: surely they were sufficiently aquatic in their habits. Likewise it is too rationalistic to see any discrepancy (as does Müllenhoff¹³⁰) between ll. 1688-9 and ll. 1696-8. The sword bears the names of ancient giants, Grendel's forerunners, of the time of the flood. Swords bearing inscriptions on hilt or blade, either in runie or Roman characters, are not uncommon. A good example is depicted in Clark-Hall (p. 231). Such writing of spells on swords is mentioned in Salomon and Saturn, 161, etc. and in the Elder Edda. Names may also betoken sometimes the owner, sometimes apparently the smith. The name of one smith, Ulfbern, is thus known from his swords. [For a representation of two of these, see Gustafson, Norges Oldtid, p. 102; cf. too Gering in Z.f.d.Ph. xxxviii. 138.]

or 'they suffered direly."

1694. No final explanation of scennum is forthcoming. We do not even know whether we should read on dam, scennum, on it (the sword) by means of wire-work, filigree work, or on dem scennum, 'on the sword guard,' or 'on the metal plates' (with which the hilt was often covered). [This last suggestion is that of Cosijn, Taalkundige Bijdragen, 1, 286, 1877. He compares Dutch scheen, 'an iron band.']

1700. This 'sermon' of Hrothgar (ll. 1700–1768), in which the Christian influence is exceptionally clear (cf. ll. 1745–7 with Ephesians vi. 16), was naturally attributed by Müllenhoff 150 to his Interpolator B, whom he regarded to the control of naturally attributed by Müllenhoff to his interpolator u, which as a person at once theologically minded, and yet learned in tradition. [For as a person of the nassage, see Earle, pp. 166-7.]

as a person at the steeling and the passage, see Earle, pp. 166-7.] 1702. Bugge [Tidsskr. viii. 53] suggests het 3e corl nare. But the hange is unnecessary. In OE. the comparative sometimes appears in a context where, according to our ideas, no real comparation takes place. Cf.

ll. 134, 2555 [and see Klaeber 251].

1707. freede, protection, is supposed to be the reading of the MS. here. All recent editors read freede, 'friendship' [Grundtvig 227], which betters the sense. But I think there is no doubt that Thorkelin, Thorpe, and Wülker were right in reading the MS. itself as freede. That the contrary view has latterly prevailed is due to Zupitza, who says: 'I think the MS. has freede, not freede; although the left half of the stroke in d has entirely faded, yet the place where it was is discernible, and the right half of it is left.' But the alleged trace of the left half is due only to a crease in the parchment, and of the right half to a mere dot, apparently accidental.

1710. Ecgwela is unknown. He is presumably an ancient king of the Danes $(\bar{Ar}$ -Scyldingas), who are thus named the children, or perhaps retainers (cf. l. 1068), of their national hero. Müllenhoff ⁵⁰ wished to alter to cafora, and thus to make Heremod the son of Ecgwela: a change which, after all, leaves us little wiser about either. Cf. 1. 901, etc.

1714-15. May refer, as Bugge 38 thought, to Heremod's lonely death.

1722. Bugges [following Müllenhöff in 4,7,4.4. iii. 182] interpreted lood-bealo longsum as the 'eternal pain' which Heremod had to suffer for his evil deeds. But a comparison of 1. 1946, where the word is used to signify the 'national evils' of a wicked queen, favours Clark-Hall's translational ways for his violance, the long-continued trouble of lation: 'he suffered misery for his violence, the long-continued trouble of his folk.'

1734. Thorkelin reads for his unamyttrum, but for is not in his transcripts. Kemble omits, Thorpe retains, for. There would perhaps have been room for the word in the MS., but in view of the conflicting evidence it seems impossible to decide whether it ever stood there or no. Of. Elene, 947.

But the text can be interpreted as it stands. We may render: 'Then But the text can be interpreted as it stands. We may render: 'Then the brave one (Beowulf) bade the son of Eeglaf bear Hrunting, bade him take his sword.' Or we may suppose that Beowulf has already returned the sword lent by Unferth. Then se hearda (Unferth) presents the sword to Beowulf, who courteously thanks him for the gift. The adj. hearda can well be applied to Unferth, whose spirit no one doubts (Il. 1166-7), though admittedly he is inferior to Beowulf, to whom the term hearda is even more appropriate (Il. 401, 1963). The change of subject (Unferth subject of heht, Beowulf of segde) though harsh, can also be paralleled. That a parting gift should be given to Beowulf by so important an official as Unferth seems quite natural. The relations of Beowulf and Unferth would, with this interpretation, be curiously like those of Odvsesus and Euravalus (Odusses. viii. pretation, be curiously like those of Odysseus and Euryalus (Odyssey, viii. 408, etc.). [See Klaeber⁴⁶⁰. Other interpretations have been suggested by Jellinek and Kraus, Z.f.d.A. xxxv. 280.]

herige, apparently from herian, 'praise': 'I will honour thee': but this sense of herian is hard to parallel: the comparison of weoroode in 1. 2096 is hardly sufficient. The difficulty is, however, even greater if we take the verb as herigian, 'harry,' and interpret, with Leo and Schücking, 'supply with an army,' or, with Cosijn²⁷, 'snatch away.' If the symbol $\parphi$ is sometimes used for $\parphi$ (see note to 1. 15) it might be so interpreted here: $\rho \text{to be well herige, i.e. 'when I have so much to report in thy praise,' Hygelac will gladly send help.

1859-61. Holthausen regards wesan and gegrettan as optatives for wesen, etc., 'let there be'... This compels us to take a pl. gegretten with the sg. manig. Such syntax is possible, but it is surely simpler to take wesan 1855-

1862. heafu, Kluge¹⁹⁰: MS. heafu. Hēafu was retained by the older editors, who attributed to it the meaning 'sea' [from hēah: altum, mare, Grein; cf. also Cosijn, P.B.B. xxi. 10]. This would necessitate long āc: which would give us a line, not indeed quite unprecedented, but of an exceedingly unusual type [of. Sievers in P.B.B. x. 285, 245]. In view of this difficulty, and of the fact that no certain instance of hēafu='sea' is forthcoming, it seems best to adopt the conjecture of Kluge¹⁹⁰, ofer heafu; especially as that phrase occurs letter (1 247). especially as that phrase occurs later (l. 2477).

If we could substantiate a word hapte meaning 'sea,' it would certainly help to explain the compounds heapto-literate (Beowutt, 1798, 2955; Andreas, 426) and heapto-size! (Riddles, Ixxii. [Ixxiii.] 19). We can explain these as 'warlike travellers,' etc., but it would be easier if we could take the first element in the compound as meaning 'sea.' For this, however, there seems insufficient evidence.

1879-80. bearn, Grein: MS. bearn. The meaning must be 'a secret longing burnt.' Bearn is an unexampled form of the pret. of bearnan [cf. Sievers, § 386, N. 2], so that it is necessary to make the slight change to either born [Thorpe and recent edd.], or bearn [Grein], with identical meaning: 'the longing burnt to his blood,' i.e. right into him. So Cosijns, comparing, for similar use of wid, 1. 2673. [Cf. also Sievers, Zf.d.Ph. xxi. 368.] Heinsel [A.f.d. xv. 190] would interpret bearn as in 1. 67 (from be-iernan, 'to run, occur'): but the alliteration is against this.

1923. Trautmann and Holthausen, wunade, following Thorpe and Grein. Sievers [P.B.B. ix. 141] regards this and the next line as oratio recta. But cf. the present tenses in ll. 1314, 1928, 2495.

Sievers would add he after har. [So Holthausen.] 1925. Kemble, brego-röf, 'the king was a famous chieftain' [so Grundtvig 1861, p. 66], but the hyphen is unnecessary. Holthausen, suggests: brec röf cyning hāan healle, 'the brave king enjoyed his high hall': brāc being an Anglian form for W.S. brāac.

1926. Either we must interpret 'high were the halls' (an unusual use of the plural), or (as an instrumental-locative sg.) 'in the high hall'; von Grienberger and Schücking, heahealle, 'in the royal hall'; Sedgefield, on heahealle, with the same meaning; on hean healle has also been suggested [Kluge, Holthausen,].

1928. habbe. See note to l. 1923, above.

1931. Möd bryde [ne] wag, Schücking: 'She [Hygd], brave queen of the folk, had not the mood, the pride of Thryth': MS. prydo wag. The alteration is essential, for brydo is hardly a possible form, whether we take it as a common or a proper noun: the u would be dropped after the long syllable. as in Osbryb, Cynebryb [cf. J. M. Hart in M.L.N. xviii. 118; Holthausen 118]. Yet $br\bar{y}bo$ is perhaps conceivable as a diminutive of some form like $br\bar{y}b$. gifu, as Eadu for Eadgifu [cf. Klaeber in Anglia, xxviii. 452]. Both scribes frequently omit ne: cf. ll. 44, 1129, 1130, 2006, 2911.

Moreover the emendation explains fremu folces cwen, which seems not very applicable to Thryth: also it explains the otherwise unintelligibly abrupt transition from Hygd to Thryth. Schücking's emendation has been adopted by Holthausen, and is much the best explanation of a difficult 1933. pst anticipates the clause pst...starede (l. 1935).

1934. The MS. may be read either as sinfrēa, 'the great lord,' or as sin frēa, 'her lord.' It has been urged that metrically the first is preferable: yet instances enough can be found of the possessive bearing the alliteration. Cf. note to 1. 262.

Thryth is the perilous maiden of legend, who slays her wooers, till the destined husband arrives. Her cruel acts are prior to her marriage, and therefore sinfrea, 'the great lord,' i.e. her father, gives good sense. Yet sin frea is possible—none save Offa, her destined husband, could gaze upon her as a wooer without paying the penalty. [See Cosijn in P.B.B. xix. 454, Klaeber in Anglia, xxviii. 449; and Introduction to Beowulf: Thryth.]

1935. hire an dæges ēagum starede. (1) This has been interpreted gazed on her by the eyes of day [Grein, etc.]. But hire an, upon her, is difficult, for starian on takes the acc. (ct. 11. 995, 1485). (2) If we read ān-dæges, the rendering 'gazed upon her by day,' or 'the whole day,' has been proposed [Leo]: but here again the construction, starian hire, 'to gaze upon her,' is inexplicable. The substitution of hie for hire has therefore been proposed. (3) The MS. certainly divides an dæges. But, since little importance can be attached to this spacing, Bugge [Tidsskr. viii. 296], following a suggestion of P. A. Munch, supposed and siges = and siges = 'in the presence of' (cf. Coth. and dugjo), governing hire, 'that gazed with his eyes in her presence.' Suchier [P.B.B. iv. 502] rendered 'eye to eye,' 'into her face, apparently following Bugge's etymology.

1988. s/ter mund-gripe, after the arrest of the presumptuous gesion.

[Bo Bugge in Z.f.d.Ph. iv. 207; Suchier in P.B.B. iv. 502.] Sedgefield interprets mund-gripe as 'strangling,' but this surely would have rendered the subsequent use of the sword (l. 1939) superfluous.

1939. 'That the adorned sword might make it clear,' or 'decide it' [cf. Holthausen in Anglia, Beiblatt, x. 273] 'and make the death known': sceāden-māl is undoubtedly a compound, 'a sword adorned with diverse or distinct patterns' (ecciden, to divide or 'decide'). [Cf. Sievers in P.B.B. x. 313: in xxxvi. 429 he compares wunden.mBl, 1.1531.] The older critics took ecciden as a distinct word, qualifying hit: 'might make manifest (ecgran) the matter when it had been decided,' or 'that it should be decided.' [So Suchier in P.B.B. iv. 502, and (with unnecessary emendation, scyrian, after Thorpe's glossary) Bugge in Z.f.d.Ph. iv. 207.] But these renderings are forced and unnecessary.

The second hand in the MS. begins with moste.

1944. onhōhsnod[e], Thorpe: MS. on hohsnod: onhōhsnian does not occur elsewhere. Dietrich [Z.f.d.A. xi. 413-5] proposed a derivation from hōse=hūse, 'coatempt': 'Hemming's kinsman scorned this.' But the best suggestion is that of Bugge [Tidsskr. viii. 302] who took onhōhsnian as 'hamstring' [cf. O.E. hōhsinu: Mod. Eng. hock, hough: M.H.G. (ent) hāhsenen]. Bugge interpreted the word in a figurative sense, 'stop' 'hinder.' Hemminges, Kemble;: MS. hem ninges; in 1. 1961 the name is written heminges. A comparison of the many passages where this name (or its cognates) appears seems to show that the correct form is Hemming [cf. Müllenhoff!²⁶, Sievers in P.B.B. x. 501; Binz in P.B.B. xx. 172]. The 'kinsman of Hemming' who 'put a stop to' Thryth's cruel dealings is pressumably Offa.

presumably Offa.

1945. $\vec{oder} s \vec{s} \vec{odan}$, 'said yet another thing,' i.e. 'said further'; not 'said otherwise.' The words do not imply contradiction with what was said before. [Cf. Cosijn ] Klaeber in Anglica, xxviii. 448.]
1956. If we retained the MS. reading bes, we should have to take brego also as a gen., which is unparalleled, the word being elsewhere extant only in nom. voc. and acc. Hence almost all editors follow Thorpe in altering to bone.

1960. For the MS. geomor, which fails to alliterate, Thorpe read Eomer; so, simultaneously and independently, Bachlechner [Germ. i. 298] Eomær. Eomær, in the Mercian genealogies, is grandson of Offa (see Index of Persons). The emendation seems fairly certain, though a skilful attempt to defend geomor, as referring to Offa's dulness in his youth, has been made by Miss Rickert [Mod. Phil. ii. 54-8].

1975. $Hra\delta\epsilon$ alliterates here with r. [Cf. Sievers in P.B.B. x. 272.] 1978-80. Ambiguous. [Cf. Klaeber⁴⁶¹.] Does Beowulf greet his 'gracious lord,' or the lord his 'faithful [thane]'?

1981. heal-reced, Kemble 1: MS. bæt side reced. Zupitza: 'side added over the line in the same hand I think, but with another ink.' Unless two half lines have been omitted [as Holthausen supposes] the emendation is necessary for the alliteration.

The meaning of the mark in the MS. under the first e of reced is uncertain. Zupitza thinks it may be a mere flourish here, whilst it is used to convert e into s in bel (1. 2126). In fædmie (1. 2652) also it is ambiguous; the older form of the optative would have been fædmis [cf. Sievers, § 361]. Under the & of secce (l. 1989) it seems to be meaningless.

1983. Hānum: MS. ha nū. Zupitza writes: 'between a and n a letter (I think of) erased.' There seems to me no doubt as to the erased letter having been d.

 $H\widetilde{\overline{x}}(\delta)$ num may be a proper name signifying the Geatas, or some tribe associated with them. So Bugge 10, who interprets 'dwellers of the heath' (of Jutland) in accordance with his theory of the Geatas being Jutes. But the evidence for any name corresponding to $H\bar{x}(\mathcal{J})nas$ in Jutland is not satisfactory. The $H\bar{x}(\mathcal{J})nas$ would rather be identical with the O.N. $Het(\mathcal{J})nir$, the dwellers in $Het\partial mprk$, Hedemarken, in central Scandinavia. Warriors from this district might well have been in the service of Hygelac; or the poet may be using loosely a familiar epic name. That those Hadnas were known in O.E. tradition seems clear from Widsith, 81. The last transcriber of Beowulf, not understanding the name, and taking it for the adj. 'heathen,' may then (as Bugge supposes) have deleted the d, not liking to apply such an epithet as 'heathen' to Hygelac's men.

Grein, followed by Sedgefield, conjectured halum, i.e. dat. pl. of hale(b), 'man, hero.' But although the δ is often dropped in the nom. hale for hale, a dat. pl. halum is not paralleled, and if we wish to interpret the passage so, it is probably best, with Holthausen, to alter to halefum, the only recognised form (cf. 1. 2024).

1985. Grein, puts into parenthesis (hyne fyrwet bræc); but ll. 232, 2784. show that these words form a satisfactory parallel to friegeean, and can govern a following interrogative clause.

Many editors (including recently Sedgefield) follow the reading of Grundtvig 296: swa [ne] gylpan bearf: ne certainly is demanded by the sense, but that ne was not the word missing before gylpan is implied by Thorkelin's transcripts: A has swabe, B swal, which seems to show that a portion of a letter involving a long upright stroke could be read.

Against the reading of the text it may be urged that begielpan is otherwise unknown, and that it assumes an omission of ne where there is no gap in the MS. But the reading ne gylpan pearf involves difficulties at least as serious: for gielpan with an acc. can hardly be paralleled, and we should expect gylpan ne pearf (në gylpan pearf would mean 'nor need he boast'). With difficulties thus on both sides there seems no justification for deserting the reading of Thorkelin's transcripts [cf. Klaeber in Engl. Stud. xxxix. 431].

2007. [Enig], Kemble.

üht-hlem refers to the crash between Beowulf and Grendel rather than (as Gummere thinks) to the lamentation caused of old by Grendel (ll. 128-9) which is now no longer to be a cause of boasting to his kin: hlem signifies 'crash' rather than 'lamentation.'

2009. $f[\bar{a}cne]$ bifongen [so Schücking and Sedgefield] was first suggested by Bugges, and is supported by Juliana, 350, where the devil is so described.

Thorkelin's transcripts read: A fee and a blank; B fer...; Kemble, 2 reads för-bifongen [so Wülker]; Kemble, fen-bifongen; Grundtvig [1861, p. 69] fenne bifongen; fläsce bifongen, 'enveloped in flesh' [Trautmann, Holthausen] is good in itself, but seems incompatible with the (certainly very conflicting) evidence of Thorkelin's transcripts. These leave us in doubt what was the letter following f, but make it clear that it was not l.

2018. The MS. reading, bædde, must mean 'constrained, urged them to he merry.' But the conjecture of Klaeber 1611 seems likely: be likely in bieldan.

2024. MS. defective at edge, here and in 1. 2026: [is] supplied by Kluge. So all recent editors. That some such short word has been lost at the edge of the page is clear from the present condition of the MS. and also from Thorkelin's transcripts.

2028. wæl-fæhða dæl, 'the manifold murderous feuds.' Cf. ll. 1150,

2029. Oft ends a line in the MS., which is defective at the beginning of the next line, the s of seldan being gone. In this gap Heyne proposed to insert the negative: of t [no] seldan huser. For the tautology of often, not seldom' of 1. 3019, and Pealm Lixi. 4. [Other parallels quoted by Bugge, Zupitza's view, however, with which I agree, is that there is not room enough for no to have stood before seldan, though Kölbing and Wülker think there is. Oft seldan has been defended by Kock [Anglia, xxvII. 233] as meaning 'as a rule there is seldom a place where the spear rests, when some time has elapsed...' Kock compares 1, 3062. [See also Klaeber in Engl. Stud. xliv. 125: he would interpret, 'As a rule it is only in rare instances and for a short time that the spear rests....'

Sedgefield suggests Oft seld (= $s\bar{x}ld$) onhwearf after leadhryre, 'often has fortune changed after the fall of a prince.' But this hardly gives a satisfactory sense. Fortune did not change. Ingeld was defeated, like his father before him. Better is the conjecture of Holthausen, Oft [bid] sel and wer, 'often is there prosperity and peace

2032. Kemble, etc., read Seodne. In favour of this it can be urged that of Syncan always takes a dat. of the person, and that Seoden is not a defensible dat. form. But deoden is the clear reading of the MS., and he would be a bold man who should correct all its grammatical anomalies. [Cf. Klaeber 259.]

2033. bāra is emphatic, and hence can take the alliteration.

2034. etc. The general drift of what follows is perfectly clear. The Danish warriors, who escort Freawaru into the hall of the Heathobeard king, Ingeld (see Index of Persons: Heathobeardan, Ingeld), carry weapons which have been taken from slaughtered Heathobeard champions during the war now ended. An old Heathobeard warrior urges on a younger man (apparently not, in this version, Ingeld himself) to revenge, and in the end this Heathobeard youth slays the Dane, the famnan begin of 1. 2059, who wears his father's sword; the slayer (se öder, 1. 2061) takes to flight. Thus the fend breaks out again.

2035. bi werede, Grein,: MS. biwenede. The alteration is exceedingly slight, since the difference between n and r in O.E. script is often imslight, since the difference between m and m of the same of the perceptible, and may well have been so here in the original from which our Becoulf MS. was copied; cf. urder for under, l. 2755.

Several interpretations of this passage are possible, (1) he refers, not to Ingeld, but proleptically to the dryht-bearn Dena: when he [viz. the noble seion of the Danes] moves in the hall amid the chivalry [of the Heathobeardan] then doth it displease Ingeld and all his men.

The repeated bonne seems to demand this interpretation. The Heathobeardan have consented to bury the feud, but when they see, then they can no longer control their fury

But in spite of this, and of the slightness of the emendation bi werede, which it almost necessitates, most oritios retain bivenede. We may then suppose that (2) he refers to Ingeld, the decoden Headobeardna, and that the conjunction but has to be understood before dryht-bearn: it displeases the conjunction par has to be understood before arght-bears; it displeases Ingeld, when he goes with his lady into hall, that his high lords should entertain a noble scion of the Danes' [Clark-Hall, following Wyatt]. This interpretation compels us to assume a pl. subject with a sg. verb (duguda bivenede), but in subordinate clauses such false concords can be paralleled: of. Il. 1051, 2130, 2164, 2251, etc. For the omission of best of. I. 801 and note to 1. 2206.

In both (1) and (2) the dryht bearn Dena is a young Danish warrior

In both (1) and (2) the aryst-oears Dena is a young Denish warrior escorting the queen. Some editors alter to dysht-bears, noble warrior.'

(3) Sedgefield takes dryht-bears Dena to mean the young queen herself: 'it displeases Ingeld when he treads the floor with his wife, that noble child of the Danes, attended by her chivalry.' With this interpretation it is, of course, to the dugud, and not to the dryht-bears, that the mischief-causing weapons belong.

(4) Klaeber [Engl. Stud. xxxix. 465] would take duguđa biwenede as a parenthesis: 'the heroes are being feasted.' (For the omission of the verb 'to be' Klaeber compares II. 811, 1559.)
2037. Headabearna. Thorpe normalized to Headabeardna, and has been followed by most editors. It is not easy to say whether the omission of the d is an error of the scribe, due to confusion with bearn, 'child,' or whether it represents the omission of the middle consonant, which frequently occurs when three consonants come together. [Cf. Bülbring, § 533.] The d is omitted also below (1. 2067) and was likewise omitted by the scribe of the Exeter Book (Widstit, 49) who, however, corrected himself, 2038-9. hie...hie: the Heathobeard warriors.

2039. The MS. has a large capital O at the beginning of this line, such as one finds elsewhere only at the beginning of a new section (cf. 1. 1740). But the number xxix [xxviiii] is wanting, and the next break is at 1. 2144, where the number is xxii. There are signs of confusion and erasure in the numbering from the twenty-fourth section (l. 1651) up to this point.

2041. beah is strange, for it is a sword, not an armlet, which is the cause of strife. If $b\bar{a}ab$ can mean simply treasure, it may be applied to a sword, like $m\bar{a}b\bar{b}um$ (Il. 2055, 1528). [Cf. Klaeber ⁶²³.] Bugge ⁶⁸ would read $b\bar{a}$: the old warrior gazes upon both Freawaru and her escort.

Some editors have been unwilling to follow Grundtvig and Holtzmann [Germ. viii. 496] in taking this as a proper name, and have seen in it a reference to Grendel's 'glove' (cf. l. 2085). But a comparison of ll. 2482-8 (HEScynne weard...gud onsege), and the fact that place names postulating a proper name Hondsciö are found in both English and German charters (Andscohesham, Handschuchsheim) seems to place the matter beyond doubt.

2094. ond-lean, Grein; MS. hond lean. The alliteration demands ond-lean, since in the first half-line the alliterating word is certainly ufla, not gehwylces. See note to l. 1541, where hand-lean has been similarly miswritten.

2097. br[za]c. The evidence of Thorkelin's transcripts is confused (bresc A; brene altered to brec B). Probably the MS. had breac; it was so read, conjecturally, by Kemble₁.

2107. Since it is Hrothgar who speaks in ll. 2105-6, and again in 11. 2109-10, it seems natural to assume that he is the hilde-deor who plays the harp in 1. 2107; rather than [with Earle, Clark-Hall and others] to assume an abrupt transition from Hrothgar to some anonymous warrior, and back to Hrothgar again. 'The poem gives us no ground,' says Clark-Hall, for attributing to Hrothgar 'the versatility of some modern monarchs.' But surely the burden of proof must lie with those who adopt a confused syntax in order to deny musical talent to Hrothgar. The ideal Germanic monarch was a skilled harper: Gunnar could even play with his toes [Volsunga saga, cap. 37]. And, as a matter of history, the last king of the Vandals, driven to the mountains, craved three boons from his conquerors: one was a harp, with which he might bewail his lot. [Procopius, Bell. Vand. 11. 6.]

2146. MS. defective in corner here and in next line. Thorkelin's transcripts A and B give ...is: Grundtvig 297 and Kemble, conjecture [mäðma]s.

2147. [min]ne, Kemble: [sin]ne, the emendation of Grundtvig [1861, p. 78], gives inferior sense. With on [min]ne sylfes dom of on hyra sylfra dom (Maddon, 88), 'at my, their own choice.' Exactly parallel is the old Icelandic legal expression sjatfdami, 'self-doom,' the right of one party to settle for himself the extent of the compensation he shall receive from the other. So, too, in the 'Cynewulf and Cyneheard' episode in the A. S. Chronicle, the pretender offers to the retainers of the fallen king hiera āgenne dom, 'as much as they wished': and in Beowulf, 2964, Ongentheow had to abide Eafores ānne dām, 'Eofor did as he chose with him.' [See Kock in Anglia, xxvii. 235.] Cf. the Old Saxon phrase an is selvēs dām [Heliand, 4488, where Sievers' note should be compared].

2149-50. Does this mean 'From now on I look to you only for my reward: I have done with foreign service'?

2150. MS. lissa gelong is unmetrical [Sievers]: emendations suggested are lissa gelenge or gelongra: but a simpler remedy is to transpose the words [Holthausen, Litteraturblatt, xxi. 61] or to supply minra before lissa gelong [Klaeber, in J.E.G.Ph. viii. 257: so Holthausen₃].

hafo. For this old form of the 1st pers. sg. cf. 1l. 2668, 3000.

2152. Most editors read eafor-hēafod-segn. For the triple compound

Cosijn³¹ compares wulf-hāafod-trēo. But, as compounds of three words are as rare in O.E. poetry as compounds of two words are common, it seems better to make two parallels, like wudu, wæl-sceaftas (1. 398).

But what is this boar ensign? A helmet, or an ensign with a boar-figure upon it? The last alternative is supported by 1. 1021 [Klasber¹⁶⁹]. The coforcumbut of Elene, 259, hardly helps us, being similarly ambiguous.

2157. The obvious interpretation is: 'that I should first give thee his (Hrothgar's) good wishes.' So Schröer [Anglia, xiii. 342], Clark-Hall, Sedgefield. Yet, according to the general rules of O.E. style, we should expect 1, 2157 to be parallel to Il. 2158-9. Hence Klaeber 22 [followed by Holthausen] suggests that $\tilde{e}st$ may mean 'bequest,' 'transmission.' ''so that the meaning would ultimately come near to Grein's old rendering 'that I the pedigree thereof should report to thee' [Barle]." Note, however, that this old rendering, if right, was so by accident. For the older editors misread $\text{est}$ as $\tilde{e}ft$; and having thus turned a noun into an adv, they were compelled to find a new object by turning the adv. $\tilde{E}rest$ into a noun, to which they gave the quite unprecedented meaning of 'origin,' 'pedigree.' The separation of his from the noun $\tilde{e}st$ with which it goes is unusual. The separation of his from the noun est with which it goes is unusual.

2206. Most editors put a full stop or semicolon at the close of this line, leaving the sense of bet geiode, etc. very lame or very obscure. I take the construction of the passage to be as follows: best (1. 2200), as in many other passages in the poem (cf. ll. 1846, 1591), has a forward reference like modern this, and is anticipatory of a substantive clause, which usually begins with a correlative bet; this substantive clause is contained in 11. 2207-8 (first half), but the conjunction but is omitted here, as in 1. 2035, perhaps because syddan (1. 2207) is correlative with syddan (1. 2201).

2207. The folio that begins here (179*), with the word beowulfe, is the most defective and illegible in the MS. Moreover, it has been freshened up by a later hand, often inaccurately, so that most of what can be read cannot be depended upon (e.g. in 1. 2209 the later hand seems to have changed wintra to wintru). Zupitza transliterates the readings of the later hand, and gives in footnotes what he can decipher of the original. I reproduce the more important of these notes: but in many cases I have not been able to make out as much of the first hand as Zupitza thought could be seen, All such cases I have noted: whenever Zupitza is quoted without comment it may be taken that I agree.

2209. Many editors follow Thorpe in altering Ja to bet.

2210. án altered to ón by later hand. Cf. l. 100.

2212. MS. very indistinct; nothing in Thorkelin's transcripts A and B between hea and hord. Zupitza, hea[Jo]-hlæwe, and in a foot-note: 'what is left of the two letters after hea justifies us in reading them do.' Zupitza's reading is followed by Holthausen and Schücking. But it gives unsatisfactory sense: what is a 'war-mound'? 'A burial mound about which a fight is going to take place,' says Schücking: this however seems at best a far-fetched explanation.

Further, there is no evidence that the two missing letters were do: they Further, there is no evidence that the two missing letters were 00: they look much more like um. And it is clear that the following word was not Mswe, for the second letter of the word was not I. The word might be hable or hope. Sedgefield reads hāum hāble, on the high heath. Indeed hāble was also read by Sievers in 1870-1 [P.B.B. xxxvi. 418], so this is probably to be taken as the MS. reading. However to me it looks more like hāum hope, on the high hollow. The word hop survives in Northern English hope, 'a hollow among the hills,' as, for example, in Forsyth, Beauties of Scotland: 'The hills are everywhere intersected by small streams called burns. These, flowing in a deep bed, form glens or hollows, provincially called hopes.

Although by the sea, the mound may have stood in such a hollow or hope.

2214-2220. Grein's attempt, in his Beowulf, to reconstruct the passage is too remote from the extant indications to need recording. That of Bugge⁹⁹⁻¹⁰⁰ is important:

ber on innan giong nið ða nāt-hwylc, neode to gefeng hond stgenam hædnum horde; sele-ful since fäh; ne he bæt syddan ägeaf, beah de he slepende besyrede hyrde beofes cræfte: þæt se dioden onfand, 2220 by-folc beorna, but he gebolgen was.

2214. bur on innan giong nida nāi-hwylc can be made out fairly clearly from the MS. and Thorkelin, and there can be little doubt of the correctness of the emendation to nidda, made by Kluge.

But what follows forms one of the severest cruces in Beowulf. Holthausen, in part following earlier editors, reads: [nēadbys]ge feng hond [afeorde hædnum horde:

seleful] sincfāh: ne he bæt syddan [adreg]... 'In dire need he (the fugitive) received the heathen hoard; his hand removed the jewelled goblet; nor did he (the dragon) endure it patiently.' ..

This may be accepted as giving the general sense correctly, and the words supplied by Holthausen fit exactly into the gaps indicated in Zupitza's transliteration. But a glance at the MS, shows Holthausen's restoration to be impossible: (1) immediately preceding gefeng was a letter involving a long upright stroke; i.e. either b, h, l, or b: (2) there is not room for [afcorde seleful]; the space allows, according to Sedgefield's reckoning, only 8 or 9 letters, according to mine 10 or 11, but certainly not 18 (as Zupitza thought) or 14: (3) [adrēg] cannot be right, for here again the first letter was b, h, l,

The suggestion of Klaeber [Anglia, xxviii. 446], ne hē þæt syðfan bemāb, seems likely, 'nor did he (the dragon) afterwards conceal it,' i.e. he showed evident tokens of his anger.

Sedgefield reads $s\bar{e}[\dot{p}e] n[\bar{e}]h geb[ra]ng$ in l. 2215, and does not attempt to fill the gap in l. 2216: $s\bar{e}$ $\dot{p}e$ $n\bar{e}h$ is probably right, but the space does not allow of gehrang.
2217. Zupitza: 'fah originally fac, but h written over c.' Heyne-

Schücking, facne (cf. 1. 2009).

Grein and Heyne make two lines of this, and have been unaccountably followed by their modern editors, Wülker and Schücking. In compensation, however, they make one line of Il. 2228, 2229, so that their reckoning comes right again.

p[ēah] d[e hē] was made out with fair probability by Zupitza. besyre[d wur]de partly read, partly conjectured, by Kluge.

2219. sio, Kluge. According to Thorkelin's transcripts, the MS. had sic. The e has now gone; sie is a possible dialectical form for sio (Sievers; 8 337, N. 4), but, as the e was almost certainly in the later hand, which has here freshened everything up, we need not hesitate to alter it to o.

2220. bu-folc or by-folc seems to be the MS. reading, and has been adopted by Bugge and Sedgefield. Holthausen follows Kluge, burh-folc: but the faint traces of letters in the MS. certainly favour by or bu, not burh: and there is not room for the longer word. Bugge¹⁰⁰ compares the prose bifylc, 'neighbouring people, province': Sedgefield renders bu-folc, 'nation, people.'

gebolge[n], Grein1.

2221. 'weoldum the later hand instead of wealdum, the a being still recognisable.' (Zupitza.)

The later hand reads wyrm horda cræft, which makes no sense. Kaluza's wyrmhord abræc, 'broke into the dragon's hoard,' has been adopted by Holthausen (q.v.), Schücking, and Sedgefield.

2223. Zupitza, figni, and in a foot-note: 'the traces of three letters between h and nat justify us in reading gen (begn, Kemble.)' [So Holthausen and Schücking.] But the last three letters are now quite illegible, and even Thorpe, who made a careful collation of the MS. in 1830, three years before Kemble's first edition, leaves a blank. As begn seems from the whole context to be an unlikely term for the feā-sceaftum men (l. 2285), I read beow, following Grundtvig [1861, p. 76]. [So Sedgefield.]

2224. Later hand fleoh.

2225. ærnes is not clear, but 'to judge from what is left' (Zupitza), and that is exceedingly little, it seems to be correct.

feath, Grein₁: Thorkelin's transcripts A and B weall. 'Now only weal left, but w stands on an original f, which is still recognisable [perhaps]; and what seemed to be another l in Thorkelin's time may have been the remnant of an original h.' (Zupitza.)

2226. The second hand has traced over the obscured letters sona musatide, which, of course, is nonsense. But what does it misrepresent?

Thorpe [followed by Schücking: of, Bugge¹⁰¹], sona involatode, 'soon he gazed in': Holthausen, sona hē wagode, 'soon he (the dragon) bestirred himself': Sedgefield, sona hē þā ēode.

2227. Grein [followed by Holthausen] suggests per to fill the gap. But probably more than 3 letters are missing: Sedgefield thinks 4, Zupitza 5; it is difficult to say exactly, as the gap comes at the end of a line in the MS.

'The indistinct letter after gyst seems to have been e. The traces of the third word allow us to read [with Grein] gryre.' (Zupitza.)

2228. 'According to the traces left, the first word [i.e. in the MS. line] may have been earm.' (Zupitza.) Kemble gives it as earm.

2230. Zupitza reads, with some doubt, 'ba hine before se.' The extant traces seem to me to bear this out with fair certainty.

(Zupitza.) I cannot see this.

2239. weard or weard: both make sense. 'The last letter of the first word was originally 3, although the later hand has not freshened up the stroke through the d.' (Zupitza,) I cannot detect traces of this stroke: and weard gives the better sense. [Solücking reads weard as an emendation.] "rihde the later hand, but wende the first.' (Zupitza.) Here again I cannot share this certainty as to the first hand.

Sedgefield was the first to note that the MS. reading yldan has been clumsily altered from ylcan. Both readings seem to be the work of the second hand. This is 'a genuine little find to rejoice at' [Klaeber in Engl. Stud. xliv. 122], as it gives us a simple and intelligible text:—the survivor 'expected the same fate as his friends,' viz. that his tenure of the hoard would be a transitory one.

2244. 'innon the later hand, but o stands on an original a.' (Zupitza.)

Not clear to me.

2245. Zupitza, hard-wyrone, and in a foot-note: 'w (or f?) and the stroke through d in wyrone not freshened up.' The form hard occurs nowhere else in Beowulf. Klaeber [Engl. 2252. gesiba sele-dream, a conjecture of Rieger 408, is adopted by Holthausen. Šimilar in meaning is (ge)secga sele-drēam [Traitmann: and independently Klaeber, in J.E.G.Ph. vi. 193, Engl. Stud. xxxix. 465]. This is supported by Andreas, 1656, secga sele-drēam; a support which is all the more weighty because the writer of the Andreas seems to have imitated the Beowulf. The change from gesawon to gesecga is not as violent as it looks: for gesawon in the Anglian original of Beowulf may have been written gesega(n), which might easily have been miswritten for gesecga or secga. In support of the text, however, can be quoted Exod. 36, geswafon seledrēamas.

Holthausen supplies ic, as there is a gap in the MS. sufficient for two

2253. MS. defective here and in 11. 2254, 2255, and 2268; fe[o]r[mie], the emendation of Grein₁, is supported by Zupitza, who shows that the remaining traces of the word in the MS. make fetige impossible. A trace of the tail of an r certainly seems to be visible. Cf. l. 2256.

A C-line: scan odde féormië.

2254. dug[ud], Kembles. scoc, Grein; MS. seoc.

2255. hyr in [hyr]sted comes at the end of the line and is now lost. It is recorded by Kemble, after having been conjectured by Grundtvig 299.

2256. Many editors have normalized to feormiend or feormend (cf. l. 2761) but the change is unnecessary.

2259. irena: Sievers would emend to iren[n]a [P.B.B. x. 258]. Cf. note to 1. 673.

2260. sfter beorne: sfter is here certainly temporal: 'after the death of the warrior.' The same interpretation is often given to sfter wig-fruman in the next line. But the two phrases are, in spite of appearances, not parallel: and it is very likely that sfter wig-fruman means 'behind,' 'following,' 'along with,' the warrior. [Cf. Klaeber in J.E.G.-Ph. vi. 197.] This is certainly the meaning of haledum be healfe, 'by the heroes' side.'

2262. Nis, Thorpe's correction. [Of. Bugge, Z.f.d.Ph. iv. 212.] The MS. has nas. Cf. Il. 1923, 2486, where I have kept the MS. reading. But here the change of tense is too harsh.

2266. forð: Thorkelin's transcripts A and B, feorð; Zupitza reads it as forð. He says: 'There is a dot under e, which is besides very indistinct.'

Underdotting is equivalent to erasure.

2268. hwe[arf]. Kemble gives the MS. reading as hweep, but the confusion of Thorkelin and the evidence of Thorpe make it very doubtful whether the last two letters were clear in Kemble's time; and hweop, which can only mean 'threatened,' makes no sense. It is possible either that hweop was miswritten for weop, 'wept,' or that we should read hwearf, 'wandered.' Both suggestions were made by Grein: the first is followed by Holthausen; and Schücking, the second by Holthausen; and Sedgefield. It seems on the whole less violent to alter the op, which may be a mere guess of Kemble's, than the h, which stands clearly in the MS.

2281. Müllenhoff 141 thinks that the lord (man-dryhten) to whom the treasure was carried, and who in return gave the fugitive his protection, must be Beowulf. This does not however seem certain. All we know is that the treasure ultimately came to Beowulf (l. 2404).

2283-4. The repetition of hord may perhaps be an error of the scribe. Holthausen, [followed by Sedgefield] suggests that the first hord is mis-written for hisw, Bugge [Z.f.d.Ph. iv. 212] that the second hord is miswritten for dæl.

2297. ealne ūtan-weardne is unmetrical. Holthausen and Klaeber [Engl. Stud. xxxix. 465], following Sievers [P.B.B. x. 306; Metrik, § 85], propose eal utanweard; Schücking, ealne ütweardne. Cf. 1. 2803.

2297-8. The MS. has: ne öwr mnig mon on þære westenne hwæðre hilde gefeh. This gives a sentence without a verb, and a line which fails to alliterate. The reading of the text is that of Schücking's edition [adopted by Holthausen₂, vol. n. p. 170]: ness is a conjecture of Cosijn³⁴. It makes sense and gives a metrical line with the least possible disturbance of the text. Grein reads ne [wæs] pær...; Heyne [wæs] on pære westenne. Rieger on And Sedgefield assume two half-lines to be lost. Sedgefield reconstructs the passage thus:

ealne ütan ne wear[ð] ð 🗟 r 🗟 nig mon on þære westenne [wiht gesýne]. Hwæðre hilde gefeh [......] bea[du]-weorces [georn];

bære, Thorkelin's transcript B. A has a blank: in the MS. itself nothing is now left but the lower part of the perpendicular stroke of b. Normally wasten is maso, or neut, and many editors accordingly alter $b \overline{b} m r$ to $b \overline{b} m$. Considering how corrupt the passage is, little weight can be attached to wasten being treated here as fem.

Grein has hade, for the alliteration.

2332. The 'dark thoughts' are presumably a foreboding of evil, rather than any rebellion against divine decree, and their unwonted character (swā him gebywe ne was) represents rather a lapse from Beowulf's customary optimism [Cosijn34] than from his 'high standard of piety' [Earle]

2334. Arguments as to the home of the Gestas have been based upon interpretations of ēa-lond as 'island.' But it seems clear that ēa-lond need mean no more than 'water-land,' 'land that is bordered (not of necessity completely) by water, as first interpreted by Bugge [Tidsekr. viii. 68. For other examples, cf. Krapp in Mod. Phil. ii. 403 and N.E.D.: 'Norway is a great Ilond compassed abowt almost wyth the See '].

2338. eall-irenne (masc.) forms, of course, a false concord with wig-bord (neut.). Hence many editors [Holthausen, , Schücking, 1910] have adopted the emendation irenne scyld proposed by Bugge [Tidsskr. viii. 56]. Bugge subsequently withdrew his suggestion, in favour of the less probable explanation that there was a form irenne standing to iren as stterne to stren [Z.f.d.Ph. iv. 213]. But syntax is often confused in Beowulf: scyld may have been in the author's mind when he wrote eall-irenne [of. Klaeber in Engl. Stud. xxxix. 465]. Holthausen; reads:

Heht him ba gewyrcean wigena hleo [scyld] eall-irenne.

Mr Grattan suggests that trenne is the weak neuter; 'that thing all of iron.'

This shield all of iron is, of course, as fictitious as the shield with which Achilles was equipped for his greatest struggle.

couch 2444. Swā, 'in such wise,' a comparison of Hrethel's woe to that which an old man might feel, if his son were hanged. Gering has seen in the grief of this man a reference to Ermanaric, who (in legend) hanged his son: but the likeness seems remote. Ermanaric was not credited with taking the death of his kin so much to heart.

2445. Cf. galgan ridan in the Fates of Men, 88, and the Scandinavian 2446. MS. wrece. Grein wreced, followed by many editors, including Holthausen and Sedgefield. But the change is unnecessary. [Cf. Bugge in

Tidsskr. viii. 56.]

2448. helpan. Kemble; emended to helpe. There is no other certain instance of the weak noun. Possibly the scribe wrote helpan for helpe, thinking of the infinitive. [Cf. Sievers in Z.f.d.Ph. xxi. 357.] Indeed it would be possible to take helpan and fremman as two parallel infinitives, would be possible to take heipan and fremman as two parallel infinitives, 'cannot help him, or in any wise support him' (understanding hine), as sug-gested by Kock [Anglia, xxvii. 220-1]. But Snige='in any wise' lacks analogy. [Cf. Klaeber 62 and Sedgefield's note.] 2453. For gen. sg. in -as see Sievers, § 237, N. 1. Cf. ll. 68, 2921. 2454. The alteration of Grundtvig (ed. 1861, p. 84) and Müllenhoff 149, who transposed deda and deades, is not necessary.

2456. Holthausen's windge reste, 'windy resting place,' alters the form, but not the meaning.

2457. rēote. The best explanation seems to be that of Holthausen, that this is a mistranscription for reets or rate (see Sievers, §27, N.), the old spelling of rēte (dat. of *rētu, 'joy,' from rēt, 'oheerful'; of rētam, 'oheer'). Holthausen's conjecture is supported by such spellings as beec for bac in the Codex Aureus Inscription. An earlier explanation was that of Bugge [Z.f.d.Ph. iv. 215], who interpreted reot as 'rest.'

suciac. Klaeber [Anglia, xxviii, 446] adopts Grein's emendation swefed, and interprets ridend as 'the rider on the gallows' (cf. 1, 2445); swefad might be a Northern singular: see Sievers § 358, N. 2.

Holthausen, accordingly reads be him gio sar belamp.

Sedgefield's conjectures, seodde (=siddan), or odde[t], do not seem necessary. War broke out after Hrethel died, and after Ongentheow's sons had grown to be valiant warriors.

him may be an 'ethic dative' referring to Ongentheow's sons [Bugge in Tidsskr. viii. 57], in which case it need not be translated, or it might refer to the Geatas: 'valiant against them.'

Holthausen, following Sievers, spells Ongendeos.

2477. Hreosnabeorh is unknown. Sedgefield, following Bugge, reads Hrefna beorh (cf. 1l. 2925, 2985). But the engagements and the localities seem to have been distinct; Hreosnabeorh in the land of the Geatas, Hrefna wudu in the land of the Swedes, as Bugge 11 admits.

Bugge [Tidsskr. viii. 297] suggested hrēa-blāc, 'corpse-pale,' since the repetition hrēas hrēa- would have accounted for the scribal blunder; and repetition brēas brēa. would have accounted for the scribal blunder; and Grein heoro-blāc; but both these stop gaps are metrically objectionable [the first obviously; for the second cf. Sievers in P.B.B. x. 300].

2489. feorh-sveng. We should expect the gen. with often (see 1. 5). We also find the dat. (see 1. 1520), and accordingly Holthausen, followed by Sedgefield, would write feorh-svenge here. [Cf. Sievers in P.B.B. xxix. 307.]

Yet the change is unnecessary, for the acc. construction is also found.

2490. The episode is ended: him refers to Beowulf's lord, Hygelac.

2495. For the present purfe, cf. habbe (h. 1238).

2501. It is not clear whether for dugefism means 'by reason of my valour' (cf. 1. 1206 for whence), or whether it means 'in the presence of the doughty' (cf. 1. 2020 for dugude).

2501-2. Beowulf praises his sword, which has done him good service, early and late, since the time when he slew Daghrefn. But the following lines show that in this feat Beowulf did not use his sword. Hence some editors [e.g. Schücking and Sedgefield,] separate the two sentences by a full stop after gelsste, and take syddan, not as a conj., but as an adv.

Yet the sword may have been taken by Beowulf from the dead Dæghrefn:

in which case the connection is close enough between ll. 2499 and 2501. [So Rieger 41; Klaeber in Archiv, cxv. 181.]

2503. \overline{dt} frature, 'those famous spoils,' clearly the necklet of Il. 1195, etc., won by Beowulf at Heorot. This had naturally passed to his liege lord. (But note that in Il. 2172, etc., this necklet is said to have been given, not to Hygelac, but to Hygela.) Dæghrefn must be the slayer of Hygelac: as such he would, had he lived, have presented the spoils he had won to his chief. But Beowulf avenged his lord, though the body of Hygelac (Lib. Monst.) and his arms (l. 1211) remained with the Frankish foe.

Fris-cyning[e]. Grundivig 50, Kemble]. MS. Freecyning.

Who is the Frisian king? Does it refer to some tributary prince, or is it a title of the Frankish overlord? Since Deghrefn is presumably a Frank (Hūga cempa) he would present the spoils to his own king, Theodoric the Frank, or to his son Theodobert, who was actually in command. Ll. 1210, 2921 also support the interpretation of Free-cyning as a reference to the Frankish overlord. But the writer of Beowulf may well have been using traditional names which he himself did not clearly understand.

2505. Compe (campe), Kemble 1: MS. cempan. If we keep the MS. reading, we shall have to interpret cempan=cempum, and render 'among the warriors' [von Grienberger, Schücking, 1908: 6f. Engl. Stud. xlii. 110]. But in in this sense of 'among' seems unprecedented [Sievers in P.B.B. xxxvi. 409-10, as Schücking now admits].

2505-6. cumbles hyrde, wheling, refer to Daghrefn.

2020. The second nail-the is metrically demoent: jurior is kiseber's emendation [Archiv, cxv. 181] adopted by Holthausen. Holthausen: Holthausen: Holthausen: Holthausen: Holthausen: Holthausen: Sexifier suggestion, feohie [Litteraturblatt für germ. u. rom. Philologie, 1900, p. 61], is adopted by Schücking. Bugge 1th had also suggested feohie.

In view of the rartiy of a 'prelude' of two syllables with this type of line [of. Sievers in P.B.B. x. 302] Bugge 1th would omit ofer, comparing Maldon, Grundtvig 208 reads dēor; so Bugge [Tidsskr. viii. 297], but this was with the belief that the MS. could so be read, whereas the reading is clearly deep, not deer. Deer has, however, been adopted by Earle and Sedgefield: nigh to the hoard could not the hero unscorohed any while survive.

2556. frēode. Sedgefield reads freodo.
2559. Biorn refers to Beowulf. Sedgefield reads born, and puts the stop after beorge, making 1. 2559* a continuation of 1l. 2556-8: 'the earth resounded and burned under the hill.' For biorn, beorn = born. bearn he compares 1, 1880.

As there is all the appearance of an uncompleted alteration, I have adopted the emendation of Bugge¹⁰⁴ (following Thorpe). Klaeber [Anglia, xxix. 580] defends ungläaw, which he takes to mean 'very sharp,' with un intensifying, as in unhār (l. 357). But this use of un appears to be very problematical.

[Cf. Z.f.d.A. ix. 468 and scyfe in Bosworth-Toller.] Heyne's emendation has been adopted by Holthausen and Sedgefield.

Ineges 15je [so Hothausen, 2, shandoning an earlier conjecture, Anglia, Beiblatt, xiii. 78, and Sedgefield], believing the word 'to be a corruption of some proper name.' If Thorpe's reading is correct, Ing would presumably be identical with the primaeval hero from whom the sea-tribes, the Ingaevones, were said to derive their name (see Index of Persons: Ingwine). Ing is recorded in the O.E. Runic Song, 67, as a hero of the East Danes. Some have identified Ing and Seeaf.

2588. grund-wong was taken by the older editors to mean 'the earth': hence grund-wong ofgyfan, 'to die' [so Clark-Hall]. This interpretation of grund-wong has recently been defended by Klaeber [Engl. Stud. xxxix. 466]. Since Bugge [Tidsskr. viii. 298], it has been more usual to interpret grund-wong as the ground in front of the barrow [so Cosijn 26] or the floor of gramawang as an eground in none of the barrow groups of the noor of the dragon's den. Beowulf has hardly got so far as the floor: but a concrete, local interpretation is supported by l. 2770 (cf. too l. 1496).

Beowulf has to retreat (ll. 2586-8): the poet alludes to the issue of the 2596. hand, Kemble: MS. heand. 2603. Wiglaf is called teod Scylfinga because his father, Weoxstan (though apparently by origin a Geat), had once been a chief in the service of the Swedish (Scylfing) king Onela. Weoxstan may well have married into the family of his king, like Eegtheow, Eofor, or Bothvar Bjarki: such a supposition would make the title lead Scylfinga more appropriate to Wiglaf, and might perhaps explain his magum (l. 2614, but see note there). Ælfhere, whose name begins with a vowel, would then be a member of the Swedish royal family (since in Germanic heroic tradition princes of the same family commonly have names which alliterate together) rather than one of the Wagmundingas (whose names run on W).

When Eadgils and Eanmund rebel against their uncle Onela, and take refuge among the Geatas, Onela smites them (see ll. 2379-90). Weoxstan, serving under Onela, slays Eanmund, and, according to Germanic custom, presents the spoils of his slain foe to his king. But, contrary to custom, Onela does not accept them (for to do so would be publicly to approve the One a does not accept them (for to do so would be plonicly to approve slaying of his own nephew); yet he rewards the slayer with the spoils, and hushes up the matter: 'Onela spake not of the feud, though Weoxstan had slain his (Onela's) brother's son' (i.e. Eanmund, son of Ohthere), Il. 2618-9.

Yet Weoxstan belongs to the Wægmundingas (l. 2607), a family of the Geatas to which Beowulf is related (l. 2814). Why he was serving with > 2657. Most editors make a compound eald-gewyrht, which they generally [Holthausen, Sedgefield, Earle] render 'ancient custom,' etc.

eald-gewyrhtum occurs in the Dream of the Rood, 100, where it means 'deeds done of old,' with thought of the deserts therefrom resulting. 'Ties through deeds done' seems to be the meaning of gewyrht here.

2659. In the MS, a colon, a comma, and a s are placed after urum.

thus: uru . The colon signifies that something has been omitted, and the ö [signifying 'it is wanting': Lat. deest] corresponds to another ö in the margin, which is followed by the word sceal, between dots, thus: 5 sceal. This device, to signify that the word sceal has been omitted after urum, has often been misunderstood, and the line misread in consequence.

ūrum bām seems a strange way of expressing unc bām. Bugge [Tidsskr. viii. 58; Z.f.d.Ph. iv. 216] supposes a gap. So Rieger 410 and Earle. Parallels can, however, be found: Cosijn quotes examples of nuniges ures, ures nanes, etc., for nuniges ure, ure nanes [P.B.B. viii. 578] and towra selfra is found in Orosius [ed. Sweet, 48, 21] for tower selfra.

2660. beadu-scrud, Ettmüller, (so Thorpe); MS. byrdu scrud. The word byrdu, which is unknown, is defended by von Grienberger [P.B.B. xxvi. 83] and byrdu-scrūd interpreted to mean 'coat of mail.' Yet it is possible that beadu has (not unnaturally) been written byrdu through the influence of the preceding byrne. Holthausen's further alteration [following Cosijn*], bord ond beadu-scrūd, does not seem essential, though it certainly improves the reading of the text, in which the shield is not mentioned, and the coat of mail enumerated twice.

Bugge [Tidsskr. viii. 55 etc.] suggested bywdu scrud, 'adorned vestment'; bywan, to adorn, occurs in l. 2257.

The Icelandie-sagas, with their greater sobriety, tell of a hero, who, in his last fight, had to keep straightening out his sword under his foot [Laxdeta Saga, cap. 49]. 2686. Jonne. Wighaf attacks what he knows to be the more vulnerable part of the dragon; both Frotho and Fridlevus in Saxo [Bk II., ed. Helder, p. 39; Bk vi., p. 181] learn a similar discrimination: the parallels between these dragon fights in Saxo and those in our text are close. Sigurd also attacked

The general drift is that gold gets the better of man, 'hide the gold whose will.' But how? Because, in spite of all, the gold is discovered again? Or because, when found, it carriers a nurse with it? Ofer-hipian may possibly be a compound of higian, 'to strive' (Mod. Eng. 'hie'), and so mean 'to over-reach.' An interpretation very widely accepted is 'to make proud, vain': hence 'deceive.' In this connection it has been proposed to connect deribition with high, 'high' and with Gath utorhightids. 'nnifed up vain'.

vain: hence deceive. In this connection it mas been proposed to connect oferhigian with heah, 'high,' and with Goth. ufarhāuhids, 'puffed up, vain' [Bugge, in Tidsskr. viii. 60, 298; Klaeber in Engl. Stud. xxxix. 466]; or with oferhyd (oferhygd), oferhydig, 'proud' [Kluge¹⁹², followed by Schücking, who spells oferhidgian, and others]. Against the last it is objected [Holthausen] that a derivative from the adj. oferhydig must preserve the accent on the first syllable, and so cannot alliterate with h. Sedgefield ²⁸⁸ suggests oferhiwian (not elsewhere recorded, but assumed to mean 'deceive': hiwian means 'to assume a false appearance,' 'to feign'): Sedgefield, ofer hig[e h]ean, 'raise him above his (usual) mind, render presumptuous.'

It is obvious that 11. 2779-2782 refer to the dragon. Whether ealdhlāfordes be taken to mean Beowulf or the former owner will probably depend on the interpretation of l. 2777. If we read $\overline{\sigma} r gescod$, we shall interpret 'the sword of the lord of old time [Beowulf] with iron edge had slain the guardian of the treasure.' If, with Kemble, we read bill $\overline{s} r gescod$, this will be object of $genom$ in l. 2776, and we must accordingly delete 2829. Thorpe's emendation heado-scearpe, 'battle sharp,' has been followed by many editors, and, indeed, it seems very probable that secarpe might have been miswritten secarde, through the influence of the preceding heards. Yet scearde can be defended [Schücking in Engl. Stud. xxxix.

2852. It is possible that wlitan=wlitan (infin.), in which case only a comma should be placed after lag. [So Sedgefield.] Most editors have followed Thorkelin in normalizing to Wiglaf. See note to ll. 218 and 1530. 2854. wette, 'tried to awake him' [Klaeber²⁶¹]. Cf. brac (l. 1511). Sedgefield ²⁸⁸ suggests wētte = w stte, 'wetted.'

spēow, Thorkelin: MS. speop.
2857. The reading of the text would mean 'change aught ordained of God.' Most editors follow Thorpe in substituting willan for with [so Holthausen and Schücking]. Klaeber suggests weerold-endes with, 'anything of the end of his life'; i.e. 'he could not avert his death at all' [J.E.G.Ph. viii. 258].

[2.E. G. F.R. VIII. 205].

2860. The strong form geongum after dām is, of course, exceptional, and is probably only a scribal error for geongan. Holthausen and Schücking alter to geongan. See note to l. 158.

2863. sec[g], Thorkelin's correction: MS. sec.

2869. prijdicost. From prijb. Thorkelin²¹³ corrected to prijblicost here, and this spelling with d has been retained down to the present day.

The scribe is sometimes careless in crossing his d's, but in the only other passage I know where the word occurs [Byrhtferth's Handboc, ed. Kluge in Anglia, viii. 302, l. 14] the same spelling with d occurs. Under the circumstances d for d' is quite a normal phonetic development (of. Sievers, § 201, 3) and this spelling should surely be retained in the text.

2881. fÿr unswidor. This was defended by Bieger as a conjectural emendation, and an exact scrutiny of the MS. shows it to be the actual reading, except for the negligible discrepancy in the division of the letters: reading, except for the negligible discrepancy in the division of the letters: fyrum (u altered from a) swidor. Grein conjectured fyr ran swidor. Since this is inconsistent with was by sāmra (l. 2880) we should then have to make Beowulf, instead of the dragon, the subject of was. Some [e.g. Cosijn and Sedgefield] take Beowulf, in any case, as the subject of was: but it seems better to make the dragon the subject. This is clearer if, with Sievers [P.B.B. ix. 142] and Holthausen, we alter ferho-genidlan to ferho-

Severs [F.S.B. II. 125] and Hollinstein, we saler ferho-genotal to ferho-geniola, putting a comma after drep.

2882. Wergendra, Grundtvig 500, Kemble,: MS. fergendra, which is unmeaning, and does not alliterate. p and F are easily confused.

2883. prāg, 'time of terror.' Cf. note to 1.87.

2884. Hū. This was altered by Kemble, to nū, and almost all editors have followed. Yet, as Holthausen tentatively suggests, hū makes good sense as introducing an exclamatory clause. Cf. Wanderer, 95: Hu sõo

2886. If lufen means 'love,' it certainly forms an unsatisfactory parallel to \(\tilde{c}delwyn.\) [Cf. Sievers in P.B.B. xxxvi. 427.]

2890-1. Does Wiglaf mean 'you had better go and hang yourselves'? Tacitus [Germ. vi] mentions suicide as the last refuge from such disgrace: multique superstites bellorum infamiam laqueo finierunt. [Cf. Scherer, Kleinere Schriften, 1. 490, for a comparison of this passage with other 2893. $\bar{c}g$-clif$, Kemble$; MS. $ccg$ clif$. Kemble's emendation is supported by 1.577, and has been adopted by almost all later editors, it being urged that 'ccg' is used only of weapons in O.E.' This however is far from being the case: $ccg$, 'verge, brink of high ground,' occurs very frequently in the charters. Nevertheless, since ness in 1. 2898 makes it probable that the army was stationed on a sea-cliff, I adopt Kemble's emendation, though with hesitation.

2904. siex-bennum. Holthausen and Sedgefield spell sex-bennum [from seax]. Cf. Sievers § 108, 2.
2909. Kemble, and Rieger 413 read hige-mēdum, 'holds watch over the spirit-wearied, i.e. the dead.' This is not, in reality, a textual alteration, since in the Anglian original mēdum and mēdum would have coincided in form; but we should rather have expected hige-mēdra, agreeing with leofes ond lades. Sievers [P.B.B. ix. 142; but of. P.B.B. xxxvi. 419] and, tentatively, Bugge 106 would read hige-mēde, 'weavy of soul,' qualifying Wiglaf, to whom similar epithets are applied, 11. 2852, 2863: hyge-mēde occurs in 1. 2442, where, however, it seems to mean 'wearying the mind.' Bugge also suggests hige-mēdum, from a presumed hige-mēdu, 'weariness of spirit'

2929. ondslyht, a correction of Grein₁: MS. hond slyht, here and in l. 2972. The change is necessary for the alliteration. Cf. l. 1541 (and note), and see Sievers 3 § 217, N. 1.

2930. ābrēot. Some editors follow Kemble, in normalizing to ābrēat. But confusion of so and sa is common in the non-W. S. dialects, and traces of it are abundant in Beowulf. Further, in this type of strong verb, so is found in place of sa, even in W.S. See Sievers, § 384, N. 2.

brūd āheorde. The MS. has bryda heorde. No importance can be attached to the spacing of the MS.: yet the verb āheordan, 'to release from guardianship' (heord) is not elsewhere recorded, and is doubtful. Holthausen, a ājeorde, 'removed': so Sedgefeld; Holthausen, follows Bugge107, ahredde, 'saved.'

2940-1. Sedgefield, following Thorpe, reads grētan: but the change is unnecessary; gētan, 'to destroy,' is not uncommon in the compound āgētan. [For the etymology of. I.F. xx. 327, where Holthausen adduces Lithuanian and Lettish cognates.]

The MS. has sum on galg treewu to gamene: Thorpe corrected sum[e] and supplied [fuglum], comparing Judith, 297, fuglum to frofre: Kemble, had emended to treowu[m].

Bugge 107 [cf. Tidsskr. viii. 60], Holthausen, and Sievers [P.B.B. ix. 143] suppose a gap here of a line or more, and this is borne out by the fact that, even after making the three corrections in the text in ll. 2940-1, the construction is not very satisfactory.

2943. horn ond byman are to be taken together in apposition with gealdor [with Holthausen], rather than byman construed as a gen. dependent 2949. se gōda is Ongentheow. Bugge²⁷³ proposed gometa (cf. l. 2968), because he thought so complimentary a word inapplicable to the Swedish king in the mouth of the Geat who is here speaking. An unnecessary scruple; cf. 1. 2382 for praise of a Swedish king.

2957-9. If we retain the MS. reading, we must interpret: 'Pursuit was offered to the Swedes and a captured banner [was] offered to Hygelac.' Thus many editors, and lately Schücking, who quotes parallels for the importance attached in Germanic times to the capture of the enemy's banner. [Cf. Cosijns.] This reading compels us to take boden with two widely different nouns, but 1.653 may be quoted as a parallel to this [Klaeber0]; and, though the construction is harsh, none of the emendations are sufficiently convincing to justify our deserting the MS.

Schröer [Anglia, xiii. 347] takes $\vec{B}ht$ as 'treasure,' and alters $\vec{loodum}$ to $\vec{loodum}$ both the treasure of the Swedes and a banner were offered [as ransom] to Hygelac.' So, too, Sedgefield, but without altering the text: 'were offered by the people of the Swedes to Hygelac.' Bugga $\vec{loot}$ and in $Tidaskr. viii. 61], following $\vec{kemble}_2$ and Thorpe, read $Hygelaces, and explained: 'the banner of Hygelac was raised as a sign of pursuit.' But this also involves a forced construction: therefore if we read $Hygelaces$ it is better to delete the semicolon, and construe with Holthausen: 'the banners of Hygelac verran the fastness' [so Clark-Hall]. Sievers, $\vec{suc}$ Hygelaces, 'the battle of Hygelac,' parallel to $\vec{B}ht$.

But an earldom of 100,000 hides would have been about the size of the whole land of the Geatas: Sussex contained only 7,000: see 1. 2195. Again, how, in this case, are we to construe locerno heapa? I should rather, with Rieger ⁴⁸ and Schücking, understand some money denomination: 'the value of 100,000 sceattas in land and rings': a great, but not inconceivable, reward.

lxxi. 10. [Cf. Sievers § 264 and Royster in M.L.N. xxiii. 122.] 8005. Müllenhoff 186 considered this line a careless repetition of 1. 2052, and this is the easiest way out of the difficulty. Thorpe explained: 'It would and and the lie cases way out of the dimenty. Inorpe explained: It would appear that Beowulf, in consequence of the fall of Hrothgar's race [mateba hryre] was called to rule also over the Danes (Soyldings). Klaeber calls this an 'extraordinary assumption,' but we may note that, according to Saxo (Book m), the throne of Denmark was thus left vacant after the fall of Hrothulf, and was taken by a Swedish prince, who ruled jointly over both kingdoms. Since Saxo does not recognise any kingdom of the Geatas apart from the Swedes, this might reasonably be interpreted as a reminiscence of such a tradition as Thorpe assumes. The Geatic kingdom was at this date nearing its fall. It is accordingly exceedingly improbable that any such rule existed as a historic fact : for its existence in tradition of. the empire attributed to king Arthur.

Most editors follow Grein, and alter to Scylfingas, and this can be taken (1) in apposition with hie in 1. 3002, which is intolerably forced; (2) parallel with hord ond rice in 1. 3004, in which case we can only suppose tat the term Scylingas could be applied equally, on the ground of common ancestry, to both Swedes and Geatas; compare 1. 2603, where Wiglaf is called lēod Scylinga; (3) 1. 3005 might be taken as a parenthesis: 'After the fall of the heroes, the Scylingas were bold'; or (4) it can be transposed to follow 1. 3001 [Ettmüller,: so Holthausen and Sedgefield].

But, since so little relief is gained by altering the text to Scylfingas, it is better to let Scildingas stand, unless we have the courage to make the satisfactory alteration to SB-Gèatas [with Klaeber, whose discussion of the subject in J.E.G.Ph. viii. 258-9 should be consulted].

3041. MS. defective at corner: gry[re], Thorkelin; Heyne's gryre-gæst (cf. 1. 2560) was based on Kölbing's statement that there is room for from four to six letters on the missing corner. [So Holthausen and Schücking.] Zupitzs, on the other hand, reads gryr[e] simply. Yet an examination of the other side of the leaf, where several letters have been lost, makes it probable that more than one letter has been lost on this side also. On the other hand, there is hardly room for gry[re-gæst]: but gry[re-fāh] [Bugge in Tidsskr. viii. 52] fills the gap well, and has the support of 1. 2576.

3043-4. It is not clear whether lyft-wynne means 'joy in the air, pleasure of flying,' or is equivalent to wynsumme lyft, 'the joyous air,' abstract for concrete, like eard-lufan (1. 692). 8060. wräte, Thorpe: MS. vrzece. Cl. 1. 2771.

3061. fēara sumne means Beowulf, being 'one of a few' (cf. 1. 1412), i.e. Beowulf with few companions. But, by the usual understatement, 'few' here probably means 'none.' Cosijne compares Rood, 69, mēte weorode, interpreting 'with a small company,' as meaning 'quite alone.'

3062 ff. The meaning seems to be 'It is a subject for wonder [i.e. it is uncertain] where a man will end his life, when he may no longer dwell on this earth. Even so was it with Beowulf—he knew not...'; bonne in l. 3062 is parallel with bonne in l. 3064. [See Kock in Anglia, xxvii. 233; Sievers in P.B.B. ix. 143; Nader in Anglia, x. 544-5; Cosijn , who compares Alfred's Cura Pastoralis, Preface (ed. Sweet, p. 8), uncud ha longe, 'it is uncertain how long.']

On the other hand we might take the swā in 1. 3066 and swā in 1. 3069 as correlative, with seolfa...sceolde forming a parenthesis. The meaning would then be: 'It happened unto Beowulf in such wise as the beodnas mare had laid the spell.

3065. MS. defective at corner: [mā]gum, Kemble 1. 3067. sõhte governs both biorges weard and searo-nidas.

Sedgefield reads searo-nida, comparing for the adverbial gen. pl. ll. 845, 3068. Jush host, 'by what.' This is explained in the following lines (3069-3078); Beowulf's death is really caused by the gursa which, unknown to him, had been placed upon the gold by the great chiefs (Jēodnas māre) who had it in olden time. [Cf. Klaeber in Engl. Stud. xxxix. 432.] So feared were these curses that forms of prayer are extant for purifying vasa reperta in locis antiquis. [See Ritual Eccl. Dunelmensis, Surfees Society, 97, etc., and Boutewek in Z.f.d.A. xi. 109.] The curse on the Nikhung heard may be compared.

3074-5. The MS. reading is difficult, but admits of interpretation, if we take ness as the adv. of negation (cf. 1. 562): 'Not before had he (Beowulf) beheld more fully the gold abounding grace of the Lord': i.e. this was the biggest prize of gold which God had ever granted to him. [So Bugge in Tideskr. viii. 62, etc.] The MS. is also tentatively defended by Cosijn 4. but with a different explanation: 'he (Beowulf) had by no means in goldgreedy wise (gold-hwæte) accurately surveyed (gearwor gescēawod, cf. 1. 2748) the owner's inheritance (the dragon's hoard).' [For ēst='inheritance,'cf. also Klaeber 264.] This would mean that, although Wiglaf had shown him some of the spoils, Beowulf had not been able to survey the hoard closely. Müllenhoff [Z.f.d.A. xiv. 241] also retains the MS. reading.

Holthausen's objection that gold-hwate must be wrong, because hwat is only compounded with abstract nouns, seems invalid: bled-hwat, 'flower or fruit abounding' (Riddles, I. [II.] 9), is an exact parallel, and Holthausen, returns to gold-hwæte as an adv.

Neither Bugge's rendering nor Cosijn's gives very good sense, but neither are any of the suggested emendations satisfactory. Sievers [P.B.B. ix. 143] reads næs he goldhwætes gearwor hæfde, etc., 'Beowulf had not experienced the favour of the gold-greedy owner (the dragon)'; Rieger 416 and Cosijn 41, næs he gold hwædre gearwor hæfde [ofer] agendes est ær gesceawod, 'Beownlf had never looked more eagerly upon gold which he had gained against the will of its owner'; ten Brink¹⁴⁵ and Wyatt, næs [i.e. ne wæs] hē gold-hwæt; gearwor hæfde...' Beowulf was not avaricious; rather he had experienced the grace of the Lord' (and therefore was endowed with the virtues); Holthausen, Schücking, and Sedgefield read goldahte or goldfratwe, 'never before had Beowulf gazed more eagerly upon gold adornments, the delight [or inheritance] of their owner'; or we might interpret the same reading, with Schücking [Engl. Stud. xxxix. 111], partly following Trautmann, 'rather would he [se secg of 1. 3071] not have gazed upon the gold adornments...'

If the text is to be altered at all it would probably be best to read hie...hæfdon for hē...hæfde: 'in no wise had these avaricious lords known the grace of the Creator,' i.e. the authors of the spell were heathen. Cf.

 3115. The introduction of a parenthesis between the verb fretan and its object strengel is certainly strange. Consequently many editors take wearan, not as the intrans. verb 'to grow,' but as a trans. verb, meaning 'to devour,' parallel to fretan and, with it, governing strengel. Various cognates and derivations have been suggested. Coslin connects with Lat. vezci, Earle and Sedgefeld with wascan 'to bathe, envelope,' Holthausen with Goth. fra-wisan, 'to spend, exhaust.'

It must be remembered that this page has been almost entirely freshened up in a later hand, and, in part, erroneously. Thus in ll. 3150, 3155, though only [s]ia, hyōo can now be read, no doubt sio, hynōo were the original readings. Bugge's restoration is therefore not to be discredited merely because a letter does not agree with what is now visible in the MS.

The reconstruction of il. 3150-55 made by Bugge¹¹⁰⁻¹¹ is, apart from the last half-line, not to be improved upon:

swylce giōmor-gyd sio geō-mēowle sfier Bēowulfe bunden-heorde song sorg-cearig, sæde geneahhe, 8150 swylce giomor-gyd Bet hio hyre hearm-dagas hearde ondrede wil-fylla worn wigendes egesan

geo (l. 3150) had been conjectured by Ettmüller, and sio geo-meowle, partly conjectured, partly deciphered, by Zupitza, who pointed out that this reading was confirmed by the Latin gloss anus written above. Under an / exceptionally good light, Zupitza had also read, or 'thought he had been able to read,' first metodes, and later [w]igendes (l. 8154). The b of bundenheorde (l. 3151) was conjectured by Grein. All the remainder of this excellent restoration is due to Bugge.

But Bugge's last half-line, hēof on rice wealg, 'lamentation in a strange land,' is a wanton departure from the MS., and is certainly wrong. The MS. reading is clearly heofon rece swealg, 'heaven swallowed the smoke' [swealg was conjectured by Ettmüller2: on further examination it proved to be the MS, reading l.

Bugge comments upon his reconstruction: 'For the whole passage of. 11. 3016-20. Beowulf's aged widow (geo-meowle) was perhaps Hygd; cf. 11. 2369 ff.

A close parallel is provided by the Fates of Men, 46-7, 'the lady laments, seeing the flames consume her son.' [For the O.E. song of lament over the dead, of. Schücking in Engl. Stud. xxxix. 1, etc.] Compare too the lament of Andromache over Hector [Iliad xxiv. 725-45], which has the same governing motive: the fear that, now the tribal hero is dead, nothing but captivity awaits the defenceless folk. See also Il. 2999, etc., 3016, etc.

APPENDIX

THE FIGHT AT FINNSBURG

George Hickes first printed the fragment of the Fight at Finnsburg in his Thesaurus (1705: vol. r. p. 192). He mentions that he had found it written on a single leaf in a MS. of 'Semi-Saxon' Homilies in the Lambeth Library. Bepeated search has failed to discover this leaf, and we have nothing to depend on but Hickes' very inaccurate transcript [quoted as 'Hickes' in the notes below].

- [hor]nas byrnað næfre?' heabo-zeonz cyninz: Hleobrode va "Ne sis ne dazas ēastan, ne hēr draca ne flēozeð, ne hēr visse healle hornas ne byrnav, 5 ac hēr forb berat,
 - fuzelas sinzat,
- 1. The first three words belong to a watcher (possibly Hengest), who is answered by the 'war-young king' (Hnæf).
 [hor]mas, supplied by Rieger, Lesebuch.
 2. Trautmann and Holthausen would write, for the sake of the metre,
- da hleobrode.

hea bo-geong, Grundtvig's correction; Hickes, hearo geong.

3. dis, 'this light': eastan, Grundtvig: Hickes, eastun; a and u are easily and often confused, of. 1. 27 below and Beovulf, 158, 581, etc.

5-6. The two half-lines make sense individually, but do not combine. Hence it has been generally supposed that between them two half-lines have been lost, though there is no gap indicated by Hickes. Bugge [Tidsskr. viii. 805, P.B.B. xii. 23], following in part a suggestion of Rieger [Leebuch, cf. Z.f.d.A. xlviii. 9], proposed:

> ac hër forb berað [fyrd-searu rincas, fugelas singað, flacre flanbogan]

But here champions bear forward their battle array: the flickering birds of the bow [i.e. arrows] sing."

Another suggestion is to make the two recorded half-lines fit each other either by altering $h\bar{e}r$ to $f\bar{e}r$ [= $f\bar{e}r$], 'they bring forward the sudden assault' [Grein, so Heyne, and, though abandoned by Grein, the conjecture was longlived], or berad to ferad, 'they, i.e. the foes, press forward' [Grundtvig, followed by Holthausen]. In this case the fugelas will be birds: either carrion birds [ten Brink, Pauls Grdr. II. i. 545] or the birds of the morning [Klaeber in Anglia, xxviii. 447]; this last interpretation is supported by a parallel in the Bjarkamal, the opening call to arms of which has struck many students as resembling Finnsburh.

14, 15 Đã ārās mæniz zold-hladen vezn, zyrde hine his swurde;

Đã tổ dura ẽodon drihtlice cempan, Sizeferő and Eaha, hyra sword zetuzon, and æt öþrum durum Ordlaf and züþlaf, and Henzest sylf hwearf him on läste.

7. græg-hama, 'the grey coat,' may refer equally well to the wolf or to a coat of mail.

8. pes mona, 'the moon,' is quite idiomatic. [Cf. Klaeber in Archiv, exv. 181.]

9. wadol. Exact meaning unknown. Suggestions, 'full (moon)' [so Holthausen and Schücking]; 'inconstant' [Boer, Z.f.d.A. xlvii. 143]; 'half covered' [von Grienberger, P.B.B. xxxvi. 100]. The M.H.G. 'wadel' has often been quoted in illustration; but as this term is ambiguous, denoting sometimes the full, sometimes the new moon, it does not help much. Cf.

Grimm's Mythology, trans. Stallybrass, III. 711.

12. [h]lenca[n]: landa, which Hickes gives, is unintelligible. The obvious correction habbad Foure linda [Bugge in Tideskr. viii. 305], 'seize your shields,' is unsatisfactory from the point of view of alliteration, and habbad on hebbad Foure handa [Ethmiller, Grein, Heyne, Sedgefield], 'raise your hands,' does not give very satisfactory sense: hlencan was suggested, but not adopted, by Bugge [P.B.B. xii. 23], and has been adopted by Holthausen and Trautmann. Exodus, 215, etc., Moyess bebead corlas...habban heora hlencan, hycgan on ellen, seems to be connected with the Finnsburg passage, and it seems probable therefore that hlencan should be restored here.

hicgead is Grundtvig's obviously successful correction of Hickes' hie geað.

18. winnad on orde. Hickes reads windad, 'fly, spring.' Sedgefield retains this, but most editors alter to winnad. The old characters used by Hickes have been read by Trautmann [B. B. vii. 41] and others as hindad, 'show your temper': but, as Mr Dickins has shown, this is an error.

14. Metrically this line seems rather overweighted, and it is likely enough that two lines have here been telescoped into one. Holthausen [in part following Trautmann] reads

Đã ārās [of ræste rūm-heort] mænig goldhladen [gum-]öegn gyrde hine his swurde.

Then arose from his couch many a valiant and gold-bedecked thane.

17. Sigeferth, prince of the Secgan (l. 25), is clearly identical with the Smeferth, prince of the Sycgan, mentioned in Widsith, 31.

Eaha. Most editors emend to Eawa, a form for which there is more authority, as it occurs in the Mercian Genealogy.

18. durum. Pl. for sg.

Ordiaf: Ordiaf and Guthlaf are no doubt identical with the Guthlaf and Oslaf of Beowulf, 1148.

20 Đã gỹt gārulf[e] guöere stỹrde, ốæt hể swá fréolic feorh forman sipe tổ ốære healle durum hyrsta ne bære, nữ hyt nipa heard ānyman wolde; ac hể frægn ofer eal undearninga,

20. bā ggt, as in Maldon, 278, serves to introduce a new incident in the chain of events. [Klaeber in Engl. Stud. xxxix. 307.] stigrde, Ettmüller's emendation. Hickes, styrode; but the sense demands

'restrained' rather than 'incited.'
Guthere is apparently the speaker and Garulf the person who is being restrained. For it is Garulf who, neglecting the advice, falls.

Gärulfe, Trantmann: Gärulf, Hiokes, followed by most recent editors. But styran should take a dat. of the person and the metre of the line is improved by reading Gärulfe. [Cf. Klaeber in Engl. Stud. xxxix. 807.]

21-22. Hickes has he., bæran. We must alter either to hie bæran. [Grein, Heyne] or to hē... bære [Kemble]. The context emphatically favours the sg. because the advice to hold back from the attack can obviously be given to a special person for a special reason, but cannot be recommended generally. [Rieger in Z.f.d.A. xiviii. 11.]

forman sibe, 'in the first brunt,' or perhaps 'in his first battle.' Guthere is probably, as Klaeber points out [Engl. Stud. xxix. 307], the uncle of Garulf. It is essentially the part of the uncle, in heroic poetry, to watch over and advise the nephew. Guthlaf and Guthere would then be brothers.

The parallel examples quoted by Klacher from the Wattarius and the Nibelungen Lied, where the uncle restrains the nephew, are not quite apposite, as in those cases the uncle has personal reasons for not wishing the nephew to join in the fight. Hygelac restraining Beowulf (Il. 1994, etc.) is more appropriate.

23, etc. niha heard refers to Sigeferth; hē...dēor-mod hæleh to Garulf.

cal: Trautmann, calle, for metrical reasons, followed by Holthausen.
 cweb hē is hypermetrical, and doubtless the insertion of some copyist.

27. wreccea. Hickes, wrecten. Grundtvig emended t to c.

Fisla. There is no necessity, either here or in 1.35, to normalize, as many editors have done, to fela.

wēana. Conybeare's emendation. Hickes, weuna.

28. heardra, Kemble's emendation. Hickes, heordra.

29. swaper, probably 'thou canst have from me what thou wilt, good or evil,' rather than, as ten Brink thinks [Pauls Grdr. II. i. 546], a bitter jest, 'thou canst have from me which thou wilt, either "woes" or "sharp contests."

30. on wealle, Ettmüller: Hickes, on healle. The alliteration demands the change.

31. cellod, Grein; bord, Kemble: Hickes, Celæs bord. A comparison ban-helm berstan. Buruh-velu dynede. oð æt ðære zuðe zārulf zecranz, ealra ærest eoro-buendra.

with Maldon, 283, leaves little doubt as to the correctness of the restoration: the meaning of cellod is a more difficult matter. Suggestions are 'keel-shaped' [Grein]: 'vaulted' [Lat celatus, Kluge]; 'chilled, cold' [Jellinek in P.B.B. xv. 431]; 'leather-covered = cyllod' [Trautmann in B.B. vii. 46]: 'having a boss or beak, cele' [Bosworth-Toller].

Holthausen, proposed ce[or]læs, 'the man's, warrior's, shield,' the sg.

used collectively: Holthausen₃, clane.

32. ban-helm means either (1) 'bone-protector,' 'shield,' parallel to bord, or (2) ban-hūs, 'body,' object to brecan, the shield being used in the last resort as a weapon of offence, as it was by Hereward the Wake.

34. eord-buendra, perhaps 'first of all the dwellers in that land,' i.e. of the natives, Ectenas or Frisians, who are attacking Hnæf and his men. 35. The Guthlaf here, father of one of the assailants, can hardly be identical with the Guthlaf of 1. 18, who is one of the besieged. It is probably not a case of the tragic meeting of father and son on opposite sides, for, if so, more would surely have been made of it. It is possible that we are dealing with two heroes of the same name [Klaeber in Engl. Stud. xxxix. 308] or that Gudlaf here is a corrupt reading [Trautmann, B.B.

vii. 48].

86. Hwearf [f]lacra hræw hræfen, 'the quickly moving raven hovered over the corpses,' an emendation hazarded by Bugge [P.B.B. xii. 27: over the corpses, an emendation hazarded by Bugge [P.B.B. xii. 27: Conybeare had already conjectured hræw], for Hickes Hwearflacra hrær. But, as Bugge recognized, the sense does not fit the metre. Grundtvig, But, as Bugge recognized, the sense does not in the metre. Grundvig, followed by Grein, and suggested hwearficra hræw, 'the corpses of the swift,' a phrase explaining gödra fæla above. [So Sedgefield.] Jellinek suggests hwearf [ädra hræs, 'a crowd of foemen fell' [P.B.B. xv. 431]; Holthausen, hwearf [b]läcra hræs, 'a company of pale [corpses] fell'; Trautmann, hræwbläcra hwearf [noun] hræfen wundrods, 'the raven gazed in astonishment at the mass of the corpse-pale [slain].'

40, etc. Cf. Beowulf, 2633 ff.

41. næfre, Grundtvig : Hickes, nefre.

swanas swetne medo, Grein, partly following Ettmüller: Hickes, swa noc hwitne medo.

43. This line, with the alliteration on the fourth accented syllable, is unmertical. Hence Rieger and Grein postulated a gap of two half-lines, and suggested various stop-gaps which Möller finally improved into

and Trautmann

44. duru must be pl., and is very probably an error for dura. Similar miswritings of u for a occur in ll. 3 and 27.

46, etc. It seems impossible to decide who is the wounded champion or whether the king who enquires is Hnæf or Finn. Is it possible that the speaker is Hnæf, who enquires why the wigend, the opposing warriors, seem to recover miraculously from the blows which his men give them? The position would then be identical with that in Heimskringla [ed. Jonsson, I. 449], when King Olaf Tryggvason 'looked forward on the ship and saw his men swinging their swords and smiting fast, but that the swords bit ill. and he shouted, "Is it because ye raise your swords so dully that I see they bite not?" A man answered, "Our swords are blunted and broken "....'

47. Hickes has here-sceorpum hror, 'the brave one in his battle array,' which can be construed as in apposition to wund haled. Thorpe, followed by Bugge and Schücking, here-scorp unhrör, in apposition with byrne, an exceedingly tempting emendation. The interpretation of unhrör is, however, not clear. Is it 'not stirring' in the sense of 'firm,' 'trusty,' 'his byrnie was broken, his trusty war gear,' or is it 'not stirring,' 'inactive,' 'useless,' 'his byrnie was broken and his war gear useless'? So Hialto exclaims in the Bjarka mal, as translated by Saxo [Bk. n, p. 65], > Iam dure acies et spicula scutum Frustratim secuere meum, partesque minutim Avulsas absumpsit edax per prelia ferrum... Rupti etenim clypei retinacula sola supersunt.

48. Holthausen, transposes, for the metre; hā frægn hine sona.
50. Rieger [Z.f.d.d. xlviii. 12] suggests that the struggle probably ended by the hall being fired, Hmer and his sixty men being driven into the open, and Hmsf there slain by Finn. This is improbable, for in that case we may presume that they would have all been overwhelmed, whilst we gather from Beowulf, 1082-5, that after Hnæf's death they were able, under Hengest's leadership, to hold out against Finn successfully to the end.

PERSONS AND PLACES

The student will find particulars of many of the persons and places mentioned in Beowulf in the following books (among others):

Chadwick, Origin of the English Nation, 1907.

Clark, Sidelights on Teutonic History during the Migration Period, 1911. Chadwick, The Heroic Age, 1912.

The Introduction to the study of Beowulf, supplementary to the present volume, will include a discussion of the origin of the legends most prominent in Beowylf.

Many of the characters mentioned in Beowulf are also referred to in Widsith. The references are to my edition (Cambridge Press, 1912).

Abel, slain by Cain (q.v.), 108.

Elfhere. Wiglaf is called 'kinsman of Ælfhere,' 2604.

Æschere, Hrothgar's counsellor and comrade in arms, slain and carried off by Grendel's dam in revenge for her son, 1288-1344, 2120-2130.

Ār-Scyldingas, 464, Honour-Scyldings, a name of the Danes; see Scyldingas.

Bēanstān, Breca's father, 524. Müllenhoff² has suggested that the first element in the name may be connected with O.N. bauni, 'dog-fish,' thus echoing the aquatic names of Breca (q.v.) and the Brondingas. Beorht-Dene. 427, 609, Bright-Danes: see Dene.

Bēowulf the Dane (not the hero of the poem), 18, 53, an ancestor of the Danish king Hrothgar. Cf. Chadwick, Origin, 273, 291.

Bōownif the Geat (the second scribe, who begins in the MS. in 1. 1939, preserves the spelling 'Biownil,' 1987, 1999, etc.), the hero of the poem, first mentioned as 'Hygelac's thane' in 1. 194, first named in 1. 848. He is the son of Ecgtheow (263, etc.); his mother's name is not given, but she was the daughter of Hrethel, king of the Geatas, and therefore sister of Hygelac (371-5). After his seventh year Beowulf was brought up at the court of his grandfather, Hrethel (2428-34). In his youth (like many other heroes of legend) he was despised as slothful (2183-9), but when he grew up his hand had the strength of thirty other men's (379, cf. 2361). He gained glory in a swimming match with Breca (506-581), voyaged to Heorot, the hall of Hrothgar, king of the Danes, and purged it from the ravages of Grendel and Grendel's mother (q.v.), with both of whom he wrestled successfully. It is as a 'hand-alayer' (2502) that he attains his chiefest fame (2684 ff.).

He accompanied Hygelac in his fatal expedition against the Hetware, and saved his own life, after the fall of his king, by swimming (2359 ff.). He refused the throne, offered him by Hygelac's widow (2369 ff.); acted as guardian and protector to Hygelac's son Heardred (2377), and on the death of the latter became king of the Geatas, whom he ruled for fifty years (2209). Finally he slew, and was slain by, a fiery dragon (2210, etc.).

The setting against which Beowulf's exploits are depicted is historic: Hygelac was undoubtedly ruling the Geatas in the years following 500 A.D., and there is no reason to doubt that the other sovereigns mentioned are equally authentic. The contrast in tone between this historic setting and the fanciful character of Beowulf's chief exploits is obvious, and has led to the widely prevalent theory that our hero is a compound of a historic prince (Beowulf of the Geatas) and a mythical monster-quelling Beowa, who would be identical with the Beow, son of Sceldwea (Scyld), found in the Anglo-Saxon genealogies. The theory of double origin derives some support from the fact that our poem recognizes two Beowulfs, one the son of Scyld and the other the prince of the Geatas. Presumably the monster-slaving exploits have been transferred from the one to the other; but this theory does not admit of proof. For further details see Introduction to Beowulf; and for theories as to the etymology of the name Beowulf see (inter alia) Cosijn42; Bugge in Tideskr. viii, 287; Binz in P.B.B. xx. 153, 159; Sarrazin in Engl. Stud. xhi. 19.

Breca, son of Beanstan (524), and a chief of the Brondingas (521). Unferth taunts Beowulf with his unsuccessful swimming-match with Breca. Beowulf asserts that he was the better swimmer, and could have outpaced Breca, but did not wish to do so (543).

Breca probably had a place in Old English legend, quite independently of Beowulf: he is mentioned as prince of the Brondingas, and a famous ruler, in Widsith, 1. 25. The names are suggestive of a sea-story: brecan is used in O.E. of a ship dashing over the waves (Elene, 244, Andreas, 223, 513), and branding has for centuries been in use among the sailors of the North Sea to signify 'breakers,' 'surge.' But we need not therefore regard Breca as a mythological abstraction of the sea, which Beowulf conquers. A swimming contest between young men is a favourite episode in Germanio story. Of Bugges.

Brondingas, 521, see Breca.

Brösinga mene (Icel. Brisinga men), the famous Brising necklace. The collar given to Beowulf is compared with it (l. 1197 ff.). Incidentally we are told that Hama carried off the Brösinga mene from Eormenric. In Scandinavian poetry the Brisinga men is the adornment of the goddess Freyja; but although Eormenric (q.v.) is a well-known figure in this Old Norse poetry, he is there in no way connected with the necklet. Elaborate theories have been invented, especially by Müllenhoff, to connect the Scandinavian references to the necklet with the English and German references to Eormenric, but these theories are necessarily hazardous. See Widsith, Introduction, p. 30, etc.

Cain is the ancestor of Grendel (107 ff., 1261 ff.), as of monsters and giants generally: see Emerson, "Legends of Cain, especially in Old and Middle English," in Pub. Mod. Lang. Assoc. Amer. 1906, xxi. 831, particularly § vi., on "Cain's descendants." Such a theological view of Grendel is not an isolated one, limited to the two passages where Cain's name occurs, but runs through the whole earlier portion of the poem. Contrast the dread (but not hellish) fire drake. For further notes on Cain's kin, of. Bugge⁸¹⁻²; Kittredge, P.B.B. xiii. 210.

Dæghrefn (dat. 2501), a warrior of the Hugas, seems to have killed Hygelac (cf. 1207-14 with 2503-4). Beowulf was his 'hand-slayer' (2501-8).

Dene (gen. Dena 242, Deniga 271, Denia 2125), the Danes, the subjects of Hrothgar. Their head-place is Heorot (q-v), and their territory includes what is now the southern extremity of Sweden (Skaane), which is, indeed, the only portion of their kingdom specifically mentioned by name in our poem (Scede-landum, 19; Sceden-ig, 1686). They are called by various names: Beorht-Dene, Gär-Dene, Hring-Dene, in allusion to their warlike character; East-Dene, Norö-Dene, Süö-Dene, West-Dene, in allusion to their wide distribution; Scyldingas, Ingwine, and Hrödmen, all of which see.

Eadgils, son of Ohthere.

What is told of the brothers Eadgils and Eanmund in the poem, as in the case of the other allusions and episodes, must have been originally intended for hearers who were supposed to know all about them. For us, the order and nature of the events referred to are often by no means clear. In this particular instance, however, it is not difficult to put together a complete story, as we have the Scandinavian accounts to help-us.

Eanmund and Eadgils are banished from Sweden for rebellion against their uncle, king Onela (2379 ff.), and take refuge at the court of the Geat king, Heardred. The fact of their finding an asylum with his hereditary foss (see Ongentheow) causes Onela to invade the land of the Geatas (2202 ff.) and to slay Heardred (2384 ff.); but Beowulf succeeds to the throne (2389-90). Beowulf at a later time (2392) balances the feud by supporting Eadgils in the invasion of Sweden, in which Eadgils slays the king, his uncle Onela (2391 ff.), and takes the throne. This version of the story is confirmed by reference to the Norse accounts, in which Atils (=Eadgils) slays Ali (=Onela) on the ice of Lake Wener (see 1. 2896). Cf. Clark, Sidelights, 149, etc.; and Introduction to Beowulf.

Enfor (gen. 2964). See Eofor.

Eanmund, 2611, son of Ohthere; see Eadgils. Fighting, together with his brother Eadgils, against his uncle Onela, he was slain by Weohstan, who was at that time obviously a retainer of Onela. See note to 1. 2603.

Earna-nes, 3031, Eagles'-ness, near the scene of Beowulf's fight with the dragon.

East-Dene, 392, 616, East-Danes; see Dene.

Ecglaf, 499, father of Unferth.

Ecgheow (Ecgheo, 878; gen. Ecghioes, 1999), father of Beowulf the Geat; married the only daughter of Hrethel, king of the Geatas and father of Hygelac (878-5). Having slain Heatholaf, the Wylfing, Ecgtheow seeks protection at the court of Hrothgar in the early days of his kingship; Hrothgar accepts his fealty, and settles the feud by a money-payment (459 ft.).

Ecgwela, 1710 (see note), apparently an ancient king of the Danes, Eofor (dat. Iofore, 2998, 2997), a warrior of the Geatas, son of Wonred and brother of Wulf. He comes to the aid of Wulf in his combat with Ongentheow, whom he slays. Hygelac liberally rewards both the brothers, and gives his only daughter to Eofor (2484 ff., 2961 ff.). [Weyhe, in Engl. Stud. xxxix. 14, etc., seeks to connect this episode with several Scandinavian tales presenting similar features.]

Eomar (MS. geomor), 1960, son of Offa and Thryth (q.v.).

Eormenric, 1201; see Brösinga mene. The existence of Eormenric, king of the Goths, is certified by the contemporary evidence of Ammianus Marcellinus (xxxi. 3, 1), who records how Ermenrichus (=0,E, Eormenric) warred victoriously against his neighbours, till the Huns broke in upon his extensive empire, after which he slew himself (about the year 375 A.D.). Eormenric was remembered in the traditions of all the Germanic peoples as the type of a tyrant: he was supposed to have slain his wife Swanhild and his nephews the Harlungen (O.E. Herelingas, and to have persecuted and exiled a third nephew, Theodoric of Verona. This last evil deed is chronologically impossible, the supposed nephew not having been born till eighty years after the death of the supposed uncle. The story of the murder of Swanhild is based on a cruel vengeance which the king is stated to have executed upon the wife of a traitor who had escaped him (Jordanes, xxiv.). Of the origin of the tale of the murder of the Harlungen we know nothing. By a series of most hazardous conjectures it has been argued that it was through this murder that Eormenric became possessed of the Brosinga mene, which Hama in turn stole from him.

How well-known Eormenric was in Old English tradition is proved from the references to him in Widsith and Deor. See Clark, Sidelights, 282, etc.; Widsith, Introduction, pp. 15-36.

Ectenss, 1072, 1088, 1141, 1145; see Finn.

Finn (Fin, 1096, 1146, 1152; gen. Finnes, 1068, etc.), king of the Frisians, in some way comes to blows with Hnsef, the brother of his wife Hildeburh. Hnsef is the son of Hoo and lord of the Hooingas (Widstit, 1.29), who are a Danish, or at least half-Danish, clan (and are therefore called Healf-Dene, q.v.). Hnsef is slain, but ultimately vengeance for his death is taken upon Finn.

The story has to be pieced together from the short fragment of the Lay of Finnsburg, and from the references in the Finn-Episode in Beowulf (1068-1159), which are allusive and obviously intended for people who knew the story quite well. Agreement has not been reached as to the relation of these two versions. According to Möller, Hnef attacks Finn, in vengeance for an old quarrel, in which Finn had carried off his sister Hildeburh by force and slain his father Hoo. [For all this there is no evidence whatever.] Hnsef is slain, and peace made between Finn and Hengest, the successor of Hnsef and captain of the Daniah survivors. But the Frisians, Möller assumes, break the truce and attack Hengest. This, according to him, is the night attack described in the Fragment.

Möller's view is open to at least half a dozen objections, of which the most serious are (1) that it forces us to suppose that the 'war-young king' who is attacked by night in the Fragment is Hengest, whilst the evidence would lead us to suppose it to be Hnssf; and (2) that it forces us to assume a stirring night attack to have taken place between 11.1145 and 1146 of the Episode, although there is no mention of it there.

This theory is, therefore, now generally discredited, and most recent scholars follow in the main the view of Bugge: that Finn attacked Hnsef by night, and that this is the night attack narrated in the Fragment; and that it is also the struggle which is alluded to in the Episode as preceding those further events which the Episode then narrates more at length.

Bugge's theory, though much more satisfactory than that of Möller, involves a very serious difficulty: it forces us to suppose that the Danish survivors ultimately entered the service of the Frisian king, in spite of the fact that he had slain their lord by treachery. Such conduct would be contrary to all the ties of Germanic honour, and cannot be reconciled with the praise which, in the Fragment, is given to the bearing of the Danish thanes.

The responsibility for the attack is placed, in Beowulf, upon a people called the Kotenas, whom critics have identified either with the Frisians [so Bugge, etc.] or with the Danes [so Möller] according to the view taken as to the beginning of the fight. Neither identification is very satisfactory, and a better solution is, I think, to be found by supposing the Kotenas to be a distinct tribe, possibly identical with the \overline{Eote} or \overline{Yte} , whom modern historians know as Jutes.

Archæological and historic evidence points to the Frisians having been a great nation, whilst the other tribes mentioned as taking part in the struggle—the Hōcingas or Healfdene, the Secgan, and the Botenas—are small and obscure clans. For it is clear that the Hōcingas or Healfdene, though Danish, are not identical with the Danish nation proper, which was never ruled by kings named Hōc or Hnsf.

Finn, king of the Frisians, probably called a meeting of chieftains of subordinate class subject to or allied with him, such as we read of in the Norse sagas. At this meeting a night attack was made upon Hnsef and the Hooingas by Garulf, presumably prince of the Ectenas. It may be assumed that the supreme chief, Finn, had no share in this treachery, though he had to interfere in order to end the conflict, and to avenge his son, who had fallen in the struggle. It is quite possible that Finn slew Hnsef with his own hands, but this does not necessarily follow from his being called the 'slayer of Hnsef' (l. 1102) since the chief is responsible for the acts of his followers. So Hygelac is called 'slayer of Ongentheow' (l. 1968).

Such a succession of events would explain allusions in the poem not explicable on other hypotheses, and the action of the Danish survivors, in making peace with Finn, becomes less unintelligible if Finn had no hand in the original treachery, and interfered only to avenge a slain son. That, nevertheless, this peace should have been broken, and Finn in the end slain, is quite in accordance with the usual development of a Germanic feud. Compare the story of Ingeld, and other tales where the tragic interest lies not merely in the actual fighting, but in the struggle in the minds of the heroes, who have to harmonize the duty of revenge with other conflicting claims.

Finnas, 580, the Finns. The sea washed Beowulf up on their land at the end of his swimming-match with Breca.

Fitela, 879, 889, nephew and comrade of the outlaw Sigemund (q.v.). Their adventures are told at length in the Leclandie Volsunga Saga. Volsung (= O.E. Wesls), the father of Sigmund and Signy, is treacherously slain, with his retinue, by the husband of Signy, on a visit. Sigmund alone escapes, and becomes an outlaw. Signy sends him as helper her son Sinfjotli (= Fitela), who is also Sigmund's own son. They take their vengeance, and Sigmund regains his father's throne. But Sinfjotli is at last slain through the wiles of Sigmund's wife, whose kin he has slain. Sigmund takes the corpse of Sinfjotli to the sea, and places it in a small boat to be ferried across a fiord: whereupon both the boat and the boatman, who is doubtless Odin, vanish.

Froncan (gen. Francna 1210), the Franks. Hygelac was defeated and slain, in his historic invasion of the Netherlands, by a combined army of Frisians and Franks (1202 ff., 2910 ff.).

Fr§san (gen. Frēsena 1093, Fr§sna 1104, Frēsna 2915), the Frisians. The Frisians are alluded to in two connections, (1) as the people of Finn (q.v.; 1068 ff.), who are apparently the main body of the Frisians, dwelling east and north of what is now the Zuyder Zee; (2) as the [West] Frisians, who combined with the Franks against Hygelac (1202 ff., 2912 ff.). The land of the former is called 'Fr§s-land' in l. 1126, that of the latter 'Frēs-lond' (pl.) in l. 2857, 'Frēsna land' in l. 2915; but that this is a purely accidental distinction is clear from Widstth, where the e and y are reversed (1l. 27, 68).

- Gentas (gen. Geotena 443), the people to whom Beowulf belonged. They are also called GüS-Geatas, Hrēslingas, Sü-Geatas, Weder-Geatas, and Wederas. Evidence both etymological and historical is in favour of the identification of the Geatas with the inhabitants of what is now Southern Sweden, south of the great lakes (the Swedish Götar, O.N. Gautar). We have references in Greek writers to these Gautoi as an independent nation in the second century, and again in the sixth; and though at a later date they were absorbed in Sweden, the title of the king of Sweden, rex Sveorum Gothorumque, commemorates to the present day the old distinction.

Another theory (the warmest advocates of which have been Fahlbeck, Bugge, and Schütte) identifies the Geatas with the Jutes. But the arguments in favour of this view are not conclusive.

- Gēat-mecgas (dat. Gēat-mæcgum 491, gen. Gēat-mecga 829), Geat men, referring to the fourteen Geatas (207) who accompanied Beowulf to Heorot.
- Giffus (2494), probably the Gepidae, a people closely akin to the Gotha, and originally their neighbours, dwelling near the mouth of the Vistula. They migrated south in the third century, and founded a kingdom in what is now S.E. Hungary, which was overthrown by the Langobardi in the sixth century. After this the Gepidae disappear from history, though their mention here and in Widsith (1.60) points to the name having survived in tradition.
- Grendel (gen. Grendles 127, 195, 2002, etc., Grendeles 2006, 2118, 2139, 2358; dat. Grendle 666, 930, 1577, 2621, etc.), the famous monster, slain by Beowulf. He is of the kindred of Cain (1265 ff.). His father is unknown (1865).
- Grendles mödor (Grendeles mödor 2118, 2189), Grendel's dam, the slaying of whom is Beowuli's second great exploit. She is sometimes spoken of as a male, sometimes as a female; of. II. 1260, 1879, 1892, 1894, 1497, 2136 with 1292 ff., 1839, 1504 ff., 1541 ff.
- Güő-Gēatas, 1538, War-Geatas; see Gēatas.
- Gatilat, 1148, a Danish warrior under Hnzef and Hengest. Since it was customary to give brothers names in which the same element occurred, it is probable, on a priori grounds alone, that the Ordlaf who is associated with Guthlaf (F. 18) is his brother, and that Hunlaf, who would be the father of Hunlafing, is a third brother. This is confirmed by the discovery of Chadwick, that, in the Latin summary of the Skipi-dunga Saga, a Danish king named Leifus is mentioned, who had seven sons, three of whom were called Hunleifus, Oddleifus, and Gunnleifus, names which correspond exactly to Hunlaf, Ordlaf, and Guthlaf.

- Hastorn (Hastoen 2925, dat. Hastornne 2482), second son of Hrethel, king of the Geatas. He accidentally kills his elder brother Herebeald with an arrow during his father's lifetime (2425 ff.); succeeds to the throne at his father's death, but falls in battle at Ravenswood fighting against the Swedish king Ongentheow (2923 ff.).

- Hāma, 1198; see Brösinga mene. Hama is the Heims of continental German tradition, the comrade of Wittich (O.E. Wudga, Widia), with whom he is also associated in Old English story (Widsith, Il. 124, 130). In German, just as in Old English legend, Hama harries and robs the tyrant Eormenric (Ermirch, Erminrek).

- Healfdene, 57, king of the Danes, son of Beowulf the Scylding. As father of Hrothgar and Halga (= Hroarr and Helgi), he is known to us from Scandinavian sources.
- Healf-Dene, Half-Danes, the tribe to which Hnæf belongs; see l. 1069. The name may perhaps signify a tribe akin to the Danes, but independent, or half independent, of the central Danish power at Leire (Heorot).
- Heardred, son of Hygelac and Hygd. While still under age (2370) he succeeds his father as king of the Geatas, so that Beowulf for a time acts as his counsellor and protector (2377). He is slain by the Swedes under Onela (2200 ff., 2379 ff.).
- Heafo-Beardan (2032, etc.), the tribe to which Ingeld (q.v.) belongs. They have been identified with the Langobardi, the tribe from whom the Lombards are descended; and with the Heruli, who are known to have been at feud with the Danes. But evidence for either identification is insufficient, though early kinship with the Langobardi is probable enough. Cf. Widsith, ed. Chambers, pp. 205-6.

- Heorot (Heort 78, dat. Heorute 766, Hiorte 2099), the hall Heorot or Hart, which Hrothgar built (67 ft.). The site of Heorot can almost certainly be identified with Leire in Seeland, which, according to Scandinavian tradition, was the capital of the kings whose names correspond to Hrothgar and Hrothulf.

- Herebeald, 2434, 2463, eldest son of the Geat king Hrethel, accidentally killed with an arrow by his brother Hætheyn (2435 ff.).
- Heremod, 901, 1709, a Danish king, is twice introduced as a kind of stock example of a bad and cruel king. In the end he is betrayed into the hands of his foes (903). He would seem to have preceded Scyld, and it must have been after his fall that the Danes suffered owing to lack of a lord (cf. l. 15). See Chadwick, Origin, 148 ff., 272 f., 291 ff.; Bugge⁴⁷, etc.

- Hetware, 2363, 2916, the Hattuarii, the tribe against whom Hygelac made the raid in which he met his death. They were a Frankish people, and seem, in classical times, when they are first mentioned as submitting to Tiberius, to have been dwelling between the Rhine and the present Zuyder Zee. Subsequently they spread higher up the Rhine, to the neighbourhood of the modern Cleves, and it was no doubt here that Hygelac attacked the 'Attoarios,' as they are called in the account of this attack given in the Liber Histories Francorum (see Hygelac).

Hoteuf, 1017, 1181, the son of Hrothgar's younger brother Halga (q.v.). He lived at the Dassier seart. Wealththeow expresses the hope that he will be good to their children in return for their kindness to him, if he survives Hrothgar (1180 ff.). It would seem that this hope was not destined to be fulfilled (1164-5). We know from Scandinavian sources that Roluo (Hrothulf) deposed and slew Refricus (Hrethrio) and that finally his hall was burnt over his head and he himself slain by Hiarwarus (Heoroweard).

Hunferd, see Unferd.

Hunlafing, 1143, the son of Hunlaf. Hunlaf is almost certainly a brother of Guthlaf and Ordlaf, and therefore a warrior on the Danish side. When the son of Hunlaf places a sword in Hengest's bosom, this signifies that Hengest enters his service. It may be that Hunlaf was slain by Finn's men in the fighting at Finnsburg, and that, by doing allegiance to his son, Hengest undertakes to help to avenge him, and thus to break his oath to Finn and the Eotenas.

Hygd, 1926, 2172, 2369, daughter of Hæreth (1929), wife of Hygelac (q.v.), and mother of Heardred; see 1926 ff., and Hygelac.

Hygelāc (usually spelt Higelāc, 435, etc.; Hygelāc 2151, etc.; gen. Hygelāces 2386, 2948, Higelāces 194, etc., Hylāces 1530; dat. Hygelāce 2169, Higelāce 452, etc.), the reigning king of the Geatas during the greater part of the action of the poem. He is the third son of Hrethel, and uncle to Beowulf; see genealogical tables.

When his brother Hæthcyn was defeated and slain by Ongentheow at Ravenswood (2924), Hygelac came quickly in pursuit (2943) and put Ongentheow to flight (2949); but though, as the leader of the attack, he is called 'Ongentheow's banesman' (1968), the actual slayer was Eofor (q.v.), whom Hygelac rewards with the hand of his only daughter (2977 ff.). At the later time of Beowulf's return from his expedition against Grendel, Hygelac, who is still young (1881), is married to Hygd, who is herself 'very young' and has not long been queen (1926-8); she would seem then to have been his second wife.

Hygelac came by his death in his historical invasion of the Netherlands, which is four times referred to in the poem (1202 ff., 2354 ff., 2501 ff., 2918 ff.), and occurred between 512 and 520 a.p. We have an account of this raid of 'Chlochilaicus' (sic) in the History of Gregory of Tours, who wrote in the same century in which it took place; and in the anonymous Liber Historis Francorum, which, though much later, preserves original features which are wanting in the earlier account.

Cf. Clark, Sidelights, 42, etc.; and Introduction to Beowulf.

Ingeld, 2064, son of Froda (2025), and prince of the Heathobeardan. Beowulf tells Hygelac that Hrothgar's daughter Freawaru is promised in marriage to Ingeld, and that the Danish king hopes thereby to terminate the fend between the two peoples (2024ft.). Beowulf goes on to foretell that these hopes will prove vain (2067-9). That this was actually the case we learn from Widsith, 11. 45-49, which tells how Ingeld made an unsuccessful attack upon Hrothwulf and Hrothgar at Heorot:

"Hröjwulf and Hrößgär hēoldon lengest sibbe ætsomne suhtorfædran, siþþan hý forwræcon Wieinga cynn and Ingeldes ord forbigdan, forhēowan æt Heorote Heasobeardna þrym."

The story of Ingeld (Ingellus) is also told by Saxo Grammaticus, though with some essential variations.

Cf. Clark, Sidelights, 103, etc.; Widsith, Introduction, pp. 79-81.

Ingwine is used in Beowulf, 1044, 1819, as synonymous with 'Danes.' It is obviously connected with the term 'Ingsevones,' which, according to Tacitus, was the name of those Germanic peoples who dwelt proximi Oceano. Ing, the eponymous hero from whom the Ingwine claimed to derive their name, is referred to in the Runic Poem, 67-8: 'Ing was first seen among the East Danish folk.'

Offa, 1949, 1957, king of the Angles ('Offa weold Ongle,' Widsith, l. 35). The reference to Offa as a descendant of Garmund and ancestor of Eomser [MS. geomor] identifies him with Offa son of Wærmund, whose name occurs in the Mercian pedigree twelve generations above that of Offa II, the historic king of Mercia. Offa the First must, if this pedigree is accurate, have ruled over the Angles towards the end of the fourth century, whilst they were still dwelling on the Continent; and there is very little doubt that he actually did so. His warlike exploits are alluded to in Widsith (Il. 35-44), and much later we have a detailed account of them in the Danish History of Saxo Grammaticus, and in the Life of Offa I, written at St Albans (both documents belonging to about the year 1200).

The Beowulf poet gives no details of these warlike exploits, but speaks at some length of Thryth, the fierce queen of Offa. In the Lives of the Two Offas, Thryth has been confused with Cynethryth, the historic wife of Offa II, and the story of the fierce wife is attributed in an altered form to the later king. There is little doubt, however, that the tale really belongs to Offa I, and that Thryth is a type of the perilous maiden, known to Germanic and classical story, who causes her wooers to be slain, till at langth she meets with her destined lover.

See Suchier in P.B.B. iv. 500; Chadwick, Origin, 118-145; Widsith, Introduction, pp. 84-92; Introduction to Beowulf; and especially Rickert in Mod. Phil. ii. 29-76, 321-376.

Öhthere (gen. Öhteres 2380, 2394, 2612, Öhtheres 2928, 2932), son of the Swedish king Ongentheow, and father of Eanmund and Eadgils.

Onela, 2616, 2932, brother of Ohthere, and king of Sweden at the time of the rebellion of Eanmund and Eadgils. He invades the land of the Geatas, and slays Heardred (2387). At a later time Beowulf avenges his late king by supporting Eadgils in an invasion of Sweden, in which Onela is slain (2391 ft). See Eadgils.

Ongen-bew (nom. Ongen-bew 2486, Ongen-bio 2924, 2951, Ongen-biow 2961; gen. Ongen-beowes 2475, Ongen-bioses 1968, Ongen-bioses 2387; dat. Ongen-bioses 2986), king of the Swedes, and father of Onela and Ohthere. The early strife between the Swedes and the Geatas, in which he plays the leading part, is told in 1l. 2472 ff., and more fully in 1l. 2910-98. In retaliation for the marauding invasions of Onela and Ohthere (2475), Hatheyn invades Sweden, and captures Ongentheow's queen. Ongentheow then invades the land of her captor, whom he slays, and rescues his wife; but in his hour of triumph he is attacked in his turn by Hygelao near Ravenswood, and falls by the hand of Eofer (q.v.).

Ordisf, a Danish warrior engaged against the Frisians (Finnsburg, 18). In the Finnseburh episode in Beowulf (1148) he is called Oslaf, but that Ordisf is the more correct form is clear from the Danish form of the name in the Skipidunga Saga—Oddleif. See Guttisf.

Ösläf, 1148; see Ordläf.

Sm-Geatas, 1850, 1986, Sea-Geatas; see Geatas.

Scede-land (pl.), 19, = Sceden-Ig (q.v.).

Sceden-Ig (dat. Sceden-igge 1686; O. Norse Skäney), the most southern portion of the Scandinavian peninsula. See note to l. 1686.

Sching, 4; see Scyld.

Scyld Sceng, 4, 19, 26, the mythical founder of the Danish Scylding dynasty. He comes as a child across the sea, and, after a glorious reign, his body is sent back in a funeral ship over the ocean. His mysterious advent rather precludes the idea of his parentage being known. We may then interpret Scyld Scening not as 'son of Sceaf' but as 'Scyld with the sheaf,' for according to one version the child was found in the boat with his head resting on a sheaf of corn. Or we may suppose that the story was originally told of Sceaf, and has been transferred to Scyld. The names of both Scyld and Sceaf occur in the West Saxon genealogy, and two Anglo-Latin historians, Ethelwerd and William of Malmesbury, tell the tale, but make the hero Sceaf, not Scyld.

See Chadwick, Origin, 274-285; Widsith, Introduction, pp. 117-121; Introduction to Beowulf.

Seviding (Scilding 2105), 1792, the Seviding, i.e. Hrothgar.

Soyldingas (Soyldungas 2052; gen. Soildunga 2101, Soyldunga 2159, Soyldinga 30, etc.), 58, etc., the Soyldings, descendants of Soyld (q.v.), the name of the reigning Danish dynasty, commonly extended to include the Danish people. They are also called Ar-Scyldingas, Here-Scyldingas, Sige-Scyldingas, and beod-Scyldingas (q.v.). Cf. Chadwick, Origin, 284, and see Dene.

Scylfing (Scilfing 2968), 2487, the Scylfing, i.e. Ongentheow.

Scylingas, 2381, the Scylings, the name of the reigning Swedish dynasty, extended to the Swedish people in the same way as 'Scyldings' to the Danes. They are also called Guð-Scylingas, Heaðo-Scylingas (q.v.). Cf. Chadwick. Oriain. 250.

If the MS. reading of 1. 2603 is correct, Beowull's kinsman Wiglaf belongs to the family of the Scylfings as well as to that of the Wægmundings (2814). Wiglaf may have been related to the Swedish house through his mother; Wiglaf's father Weohstan had been in the service of the Swedish king, and may well have wedded a Swedish princess.

Sigemund, 875, 884, son of Wæls, and uncle of Fitela. In our poem Sigemund slays the dragon; in the Vglsunga Saga and the Nibelungen-lied, it is Sigemund's son, Sigurd or Siegfried, who does the deed. See Il. 874-900. Cf. Chadwick, Origin, 148, 299; Binz in P.B.B. xx. 191.

Sige-Scyldingas, 597, 2004, Victory-Scyldings, a name of the Danes; see Scyldingas.

Suc-Dene, 463, 1996, South-Danes; see Dene.

Sweon, 2472, 2946*, 2958, 3001, the Swedes, called also 'Sweo-peod,' and their country 'Swio-rice.' They are ruled by the Scylfing dynasty. Their home was in Sweden, north of the Geatas.

Sweo-beod, 2922, = Sweon (q.v.).

Swerting, 1203. Hygelac is called his 'nefa.'

Swio-rice, 2383, 2495, the land of the Swedes, modern Svea Rike; see Sweon.
peod-Scyldingas, 1019, 'the mighty nation of the Scyldings,' a name of the Danes; see Scyldingas.

pry5, 1931, wife of the Angle king Offa (q.v.), is introduced in contrast to Hygd, in much the same way as Heremod is a foil to Beowulf. She is at first the type of cruelty. But by her marriage with Offa she is subdued and changed. See II. 1931-62.

Unfer6, 499, 580, 1165, 1488 (his name is always 'Hunfer6' in the MS., but alliterates with vowels), son of Ecglaf, and spokesman (1165, 1456) of Hrothgar, at whose feet he sits (500, 1166). He is of a jealous disposition (503-5), and is twice spoken of as the murderer of his own brothers (567, 1167). For his 'flyting' with Beowulf see II. 506-606. He afterwards lends his sword Hrunting for Beowulf's encounter with Grendel's mother (1465), but it fails the hero at need (1522, 1659). The sword is returned to Unferth, and according to one interpretation finally given by Unferth to Beowulf (1807).

It has been conjectured that Unferth is the evil counsellor, through whose advice trouble arose between Hrothgar and Hrothulf (q.v.).

Wegmundingas, 2607, 2814, Wagmundings, the family to which both Beowulf and Wiglaf belong: see Soylfingas.

Wæls, 897, father of Sigemund; see also Fitela.

Walsing, 877, son of Wals, i.e. Sigemund.

Wealhjeow, 612 (Wealhjeo, 664, 1162, 1215; dat. Wealhjeon, 629), of the family of the Helmings (620), Hrothgar's queen. Mention is made of her queenly hospitality to Beowulf (612 ff., 1188 ff., 1215 ff.).

Wederas (gen. Wedera 225, etc.; but the second scribe uses the contracted gen. 'Wedra' everywhere but in 1. 2336; see ll. 2120, 2462, etc.), = Weder-Gēatas, a name of the Gēatas (q.v.).

Weder-Geatas, 1492, 1612, 2379, 2551; see Wederas.

Weder-mearc, 298, Wedermark, apparently a name for the land of the Wederas or Weder-Geatas, i.e. the Geatas.

Wöland, 455 (the Volundr of the Edda), the famous smith of Germanic legend, the maker of Beowull's coat of mail. (See the Franks casket in the British Museum, and of. Wayland Smith's forge in Berkshire.) The best account of Weland will be found in Jiriczek, Die Deutsche Heldensage, 1898, pp. 1-54.

Wendlas, 348. Wulfgar (q.v.) is a 'chief of the Wendlas.' They are probably the inhabitants of Vendill, the modern Vendsyssel in the north of Jutland. We have evidence that the northern portion of Jutland was, at the time of Hrothgar, inhabited by a Danish folk: the Wendlas are therefore probably to be regarded as a Danish clan, subject to Hrothgar.

It is just possible, however, that the Wendlas are the Vandals of history, whose name was long remembered, though at this date they had migrated far south. If so, Wulfgar would be a wandering champion who has settled at the court of Hrothgar. [So Müllenhoff 80-20] Bugge?]

There was also a famous Vendil, north of Upsala, but it is not very probable that the Wendlas here referred to are connected with it. See Widsith, 1. 59, and the note there given.

Wöohstän, 2613 (gen. Wöohstänes 2862, Wöoxstänes 2602, Wihstänes 2752, etc.), father of Wiglaf, and slayer of Eanmund (q.v.).

B.

West-Dene, 883, 1578, West-Danes; see Dene.

Wigilf, son of Wechstan. He is a kinsman of Beowulf (2813), a Wægmunding (2814), and a 'chief of the Soylfings' (2603). He was chosen with ten others (2401, 2847) to accompany Beowulf on his expedition against the dragon (2638 ff.), and he alone justified the choice. Taking shelter under Beowulf's shield (2675), he showed the utmost valour, and was the first to wound the dragon (2694 ff.). To him alone Beowulf made his dying speech, and gave his dying bequests (2809 ff.). He upbraids the coward thanes (2886), and gives orders for the burial of the hero in accordance with his dying instructions (2802, 3094 ad fin.).

Wifergyld, 2051 (see note), the name of a Heathobeard warrior.

Wonred. 2971, father of Wulf and Eofor (q.v.).

Wonreding, 2965, son of Wonred, i.e. Wulf (q.v.).

Wulf, 2965, 2993, son of Wonred and brother of Eofor (q.v.). Wulf attacks Ongentheow and is disabled by him, but his brother Eofor comes to his aid and slays Ongentheow single-handed (2964 ff.).

Wulfgar, 348, 360, 390°, a chief of the Wendlas (q.v.); an official of Hrothgar's court, who is the first to greet the Geatas (331 ff.), and introduces them to Hrothgar.

Wyifingas (dat. Wilfingum 461, Wylfingum 471). Heatholaf, who was slain by Boowulf's father, was a warrior of this tribe. They are probably identical with the Wulfingas mentioned in Widsith, 29, and with the Wulfinge who in High German story are the faithful retainers of Theodoric of Verona (Dietrich von Bern). This last identification derives some support from the fact that in both cases members of the family form their names by compounds in heado: e.g. Heatholaf, Hadubrast.

Trmeniaf, 1824, younger brother of Æschere (q.v.).

PLAN OF GLOSSARY

The order of words is strictly alphabetical, except in the case of compound verbs, which will be found under their simple verbs.

Past participles compounded with ge- are usually glossed under the simple verb (Sievers, § 366), but occasionally an infinitive also compounded with ge- is assumed.

- se comes between ad and af.
- 5 and b are treated as identical, and come after t.

Numerous cross references are given, especially for unusual forms, but not as a rule for mere flexional forms, such as parts of verbs, which a knowledge of grammar should suffice to trace.

All words are glossed under forms which actually occur in the poem, not under normalised forms. When divergent forms of the same word occur and cross references are not given, to (both initial and medial) should be sought under eo,

Dative and Instrumental are not distinguished, except when they have different forms, as in the singular of adjectives and of some pronouns.

Where the Modern English word is directly connected with the given Old English equivalent it is printed in small capitals. But the student must remember that in 'Beowulf' we normally find the word in its West Saxon form, which often differs from that Anglish form from which the modern word is derived. Where the Modern English word is descended from a related word, whether in O.E. or belonging to some other Germanic dialect, it is printed in small italic capitals. Such related words may naturally show unlaut changes or a different ablant-grade.

Of course the Modern English etymological equivalent is often quite unsatisfactory as a translation. See Preface, p. xxxiv.

Gothic cognates have been given in cases where it appeared that they would be helpful, but not in cases where the Gothic parallel, without further details, might mislead a student (e.g. Goth. wwins, O.E. cwen). When doubtful whether or not to insert a Gothic cognate, I have quoted it if it occurs in parts of the Gothic Bible usually read by students, but have avoided exceptional words.

An Asterisk is placed after the reference in cases where the word is not found in the MS., but is conjecturally restored.

The following abbreviations alone require explanation:

ADDITIONAL NOTES

I have to thank many friends and correspondents for drawing my attention to misprints, or for generous help as to difficult passages in Beomulf: Mr J. H. G. Grattan, Mr Cyril Brett, Prof. O. F. Emerson and especially Mr Ritchie Girvan.

During the past five years there has been comparatively little discussion of the grammatical problems of Beowulf: but special mention must be made of the Interpretations and Emendations of Early English Texts by Prof. Ernst Kock, in Anglia, xlii, 99 etc. (1918).

1. 24. leode gelesten. In support of the interpretation 'may help their lord,' Kock quotes: gelsstan hlaforde et hilde, An. 411, gelsstan frean to gefeohte, Maldon, 11.

33. hringed-stefna, isig ond ūt-fūs. Hollander [M.L.N. xxxii. 246] suggests *ītig, 'splendid,' O.N. ttr.

86. Kock takes earfootice as an adj.: 'endured an irksome time'; ear-foblice brage = earfob-brage (1. 283).

133. Sievers shows that werig, applied to the evil spirit, is simply werig, 'weary.' If it were, as Hart thinks, a distinct word, akin to awyrged, 'accursed,' we should expect to find it more often in Late West Saxon in the form wyrig. [See Anglia, i. 577; I.F. xxvi. 225-35.]

249. Bright suggests is for nis, and would interpret seld-guma as 'a rare man,' comparing seld-cūð, 'seldom known'; seld-cyme, 'a rare visit'; seld-stene, 'seldom seen' [M.L.N. xxxi. 84].

489. onsel meoto. When finite verb and noun occur in one half-line, the verb is, in Beowulf, normally less stressed than the noun; and hence, in the second half-line, it is the noun which comes first and takes the alliteration, except in cases where the verb, bringing some vivid picture before our eyes, is emphatic [Sievers, Altgerm. Metrik, 1893, § 24].

Bright [M.L.N. xxxi. 217-23] has a full and interesting discussion of the metrical stress of the imperative: he would read here onsel metro, translating 'disclose what thou hast in mind.' But the verb in such a position must, in Beowulf, be emphatic; and Hrothgar cannot be adjuring Beowulf to break his stubborn silence, for taciturnity is not Beowulf's weakness.

The examples given by Bright himself show how alien to the technique of Beowulf (though not of some other O.E. poems) would be the subordination of the noun to the verb here. Bright quotes 37 half-lines, containing imperative + noun, in Beowulf, and in every instance the noun takes the alliteration: in the first half-line the verb may, or may not, also have alliteration, but in the second half-line it cannot. The overwhelming probability is therefore that not onsæl (which takes the alliteration) but meoto, represents the verb, as Holthausen, Klaeber and Sedgefield have held. Kock [Anglia, xiii. 105] reads on sel meota 'think on joy,' comparing ic on lague bence, Hy. 4, 95, hicgest on ellen, Finn. 12; and he takes [on] sigehred as parallel to on sel, 'think on joy, on conquest's glory for the men.'

765-6. But Kock quotes satisfactory parallels for but as a relative, in similar circumstances: such huylc mon such fifty for but as a relative, in similar circumstances: such huylc mon such fifty for but as a relative, in similar circumstances: such huylc mon such fifty for but for but fifty for fifty for fifty fifty for fifty f comparing a symle, Hy. 4, 114 [Archiv, exv. 421]

1068. Finnes caferum. The question is whether the 'dative of personal agency,' or 'instrumental,' without a preposition, is possible. Klaeber and Lawrence doubt [see J.E.G.Ph. xiv. 548; Proc. Mod. Lang. Assoc. Amer. xxx. 398]. Green defends it at length, but the parallels he quotes are hardly conclusive [see Pub. Mod. Lang. Assoc. Amer. xxxi. 759-97]; Kock quotes a good parallel from Otfrid: sunton, then wir fallen, 'sins by which we fall' (iii. 21, 12).

Klaeber [J.E.G.Ph. xiv. 548] would now retain gefeohtan. For 1083. the redundancy wig gefechtan he compares the Chronicle, anno 871, rade onridon.

syddan. Kock suggests that this means 'atone,' and is connected with scodan: "logically, the ideas 'seethe,' 'sacrifice' and 'atone' go together. 1107. icge. Brett (M.L.R. xiv. 2) compares incge (1, 2577) and inge (Exod. 190) "In all three passages the root meaning 'mighty' would do very well."

1440. wag-bora. Sedgefield, renders 'wave raiser,' 'wave causer,' and compares rad-bora (l. 1325).

1543. For oferwearp, 'stumbled,' Brett compares Mid. Eng. intransitive 'overthrow': 'gerte him in the nekke that he overthrew' [see M.L.R. xiv. 7]. But strengest can perhaps be defended as uninflected accusative: cf. Rood. 6. best ic gesawe...beama beorhtost.

1598. For geweord an 'agree' cl. bas be hie bas geworden hafde, Chronicle, anno 918: gewearb bā senatos (Orosius): bā geweard usic (Satan, 256)

[Hubbard in J.E.G.Ph. xvii. 120]

1757. Kock construes egesan as dat.-instrumental, and ne gumed as parallel with daleb: 'spends the treasures, not keeping anxiously the ancient hoard.'

1770. wigge. Against Klaeber, Kock argues strongly for the interpretation 'by fighting,' quoting Ps. 34, 3, me...wige belue wrad um feondum, where the Vulgate context certainly favours the interpretation of wige as 'by fighting.' Kock further instances Met. 1, 22, Beow. 1084 and Widsith, 120, etc. And Hrothgar had not kept his people out of war: he had often been on ore Sonne walu feollon (1041-2).

1861. I take the tt of gegrettan as merely a scribe's double writing, like æ hellingum (1. 906) or gebærann (Finn. 40).

1925. Kock reads bregorof: "words meaning 'king,' 'lord' are used as intensives, as we amuse ourselves 'royally.'"

1926. Kock reads hea[h on] healle, comparing brun on bane, 2578; giong on galgan, 2446; eadig on eordan, Gen. 2147.

1934. sinfreg a can mean simply 'husband.'
2051. That Withergyld is the name of the father of the young Heathobard warrior who is stirred to revenge has been suggested with probability by Meed [M.L.N. xxxii. 435].

2164. Kock takes both words, lungre and gelice, as adjectives: 'swift and all alike'; comparing frome, fyrd-hwate, 2476; hearde, heado-scearde, 2829; omige, burhetone, 3049; ealdum, infrodum, 1874. Mr Grattan suggests that lungre should be interpreted in its usual sense of 'straightway': 'straightway four horses all alike followed the other gifts.

2212. My former statement, 'hap is feminine,' was an error, the ultimate origin of which is probably to be traced to the misreading haure hap in this passage (e.g. in Holder's edition). Hab however is masc. or neut. [see Platt in Anglia, vi. 173; Sievers, P.B.B. ix. 239; xx. 553].

2223. pēow. Lawrence argues powerfully in favour of begn [Pub. Mod.

Lang. Assoc. Amer. XXXIII. 554-7].

2252. gesāwon sele-drēam. Kook, translating 'had seen [the last of] the joy in Hall,' compares ll. 2725-7, and Vergil's futmus Troes, fuit Itium, 'done are we Trojans, done is Ilion.

2338. Kock suggests call-iren ne[r], 'a protection all of iron.'
2885. Brett defends orfeorme, 'without support,' i.e. 'in the absence of Beowulf.' But the f-alliteration of the second half-line is surely against this.
2852. The punctuation in the text is probably correct, for, if witten were inf., it would depend upon læg, which is impossible, as Beowulf is dead.

3005. Brett urges that Thorpe's interpretation gives a meaning to the otherwise meaningless furður gēn, 'did deeds of valour beyond the Soyldings' realm' [M.L.R. xiv. 1]. We may also note that Beowulf had been adopted by Hrothgar as his son (il. 947, 1176), and is even called freca Scyldinga (l. 1563).

8072. Brett interprets geheaderod as 'fenced out from' [M.L.R. xiv. 5]. 3146. gelæg. Pluperfect in sense, like hwearf (l. 55), crungon (l. 1113) [Kook].

Finnsburg.

Two good editions of the Finnsburg Fragment have recently appeared: one by Mr Bruce Dickins in his Runic and Heroic Poems (1915), and one by Mr W. L. Mackie, with an excellent discussion of the text, in the J.E.G.Ph. xvi. 250-73. But we must not forget that the text of the Fragment has come down to us in a very corrupt form. Mr Mackie protests against my description of Hickes' transcript as 'inaccurate': since the original is no longer extant, Mr Mackie urges that we cannot tell how far any errors are due to Hickes.

But there are other transcripts by Hickes, of MSS. which are still extant, and from these we can estimate his accuracy. It is no disrespect to the memory of Hickes, a scholar to whom we are all indebted, to recognize frankly that his transcripts are not such as to render them at all a satisfactory substitute for the original MS. Hickes' transcript of the Cottonian Gnomic Verses (Thesaurus I. 203) shows an average of one error in every four lines, about half being mere matters of spelling, whilst the others are serious. Hickes' transcript of the Calendar (Thesaurus I. 207) shows an average of one error in every six lines.

And we find in the Finnsburg Fragment inaccuracies of exactly the type which Hickes so often commits. For example, Mr Mackie doubte the legitimacy of emending Garulf to Garulf[e]: but Hickes (or his printer) was very careless as to the final e; compare Cal. 15, 23, 41, 141, 144, 171, 210; Gr.

Verses, 45.

1. 9. Mackie, following Bosworth-Toller, would make the a of watol long, and connect with wab, 'wandering.'

30. Mackie retains healle, thus making the alliteration fall upon gehlyn, the second accented syllable of the second half-line. He appositely cites

1. 43 in justification.

36. The emendation hueearfitera hräw was made by Grundvig (1820), but his interpretation (1861) 'piled up corpses' is hardly satisfactory; nor is that of Grein₂ 'corpses of the swift.' Maokie points out that huerfite occurs in Alfred's Boethius, xi. 1, hū hwerfite dūs woruldsālþa sint, 'how fleeting are these earthly blessings.' The meaning here should then be, 'corpses of the mortal,' 'of the dead.'

41. swānas. "In Old English swān (Modern Eng. swain) elsewhere always means 'swineherd,' 'herd.' There is no other example of its use in the general sense of 'men' or even of 'servants.' This first appears in Middle English. If swānas, 'men,' is accepted here, one is almost bound to regard it as late Old English, the meaning influenced by Soandinavian sveins, which had already widened its significance'."—Mackie. Mackie also defends hwitne medo, instancing an eighteenth century recipe 'for making white mead.'

Persons and Places.

For the etymology of Grendel see E. G. T. Rooth in Anglia, Beiblatt, xxviii. 335. Rooth connects with grand, 'sand,' and interprets 'creature of the sand, or of the deep,' comparing grund-wyrgenne (1. 1518). Björkman's discussion of Brecs, the Brondings and Wealthheow in Beiblatt, xxx. 177 etc., and of Beow and Beowulf in Engl. Stud. lii. 145 etc., should also be consulted.
